ABSTRACT

Many Civil War authors have written works which have discussed the contribution individual states made to the war effort. These authors, however, have failed to consider the contributions made by individual counties. For example, in his work, Illinois in the Civil War, Victor Hicken has provided readers with a comprehensive history of Illinois' role in the Civil War. However, Professor Hicken's work has failed to consider the contribution Illinois' counties made to the war effort. Therefore, it is the purpose of this thesis to examine one Illinois county's contribution to that war.

When the Civil War began in 1861, Edgar County was only thirty-eight years old, yet, over 16,000 inhabitants were living within the county at the time. Most of these individuals were born within the county, although many were from various midwestern states. Through the use of census records taken in 1860, a good composite of a typical soldier from the county has been made. Everything from economics to religion has been examined in relation to the average soldier from Edgar County.

The major emphasis of this study, however, is to analyze the contribution that Edgar County made to the war effort. In all, 2,312 men from the county are credited with serving in the war. This represents about three-fourths of those who were considered eligible. Of the eighty different units in which Edgar Countians enlisted, several contained large numbers of soldiers from the county. These units have been examined individually, with emphasis being placed on the county's contribution to each. In addition, a separate chapter discusses some of the battles in which Edgar Countians both participated in and were killed at, as well as examines the numbers of soldiers from the county who lost their lives during the war due to other causes.

In Edgar County, locally strong Copperhead activity kept local officials busy throughout the latter part of the war. To fully understand this activity, a brief examination of the county's early immigration patterns and political backgrounds has been included. Early immigrants to the county were primarily from the South. Later, many northern immigrants settled in the county. As a result, an animosity grew between these two groups as the war progressed resulting in violence.

A concluding chapter analyzes and compares Edgar's contribution with that of surrounding east-central Illinois counties and the state in general. The conclusion reached by this author is that Edgar County's contribution to the Civil War was significant, in both manpower and overall contribution. The final portion of this thesis consists of a carefully prepared list of those known to have served in the war from the county. By including this the author hopes to fill a void which has existed for some time.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank the following individuals and institutions for their generous help in the preparation of this thesis. First of all, Professor Robert W. Sterling of the Eastern Illinois History Department for his supervision of this project. To the other members of my thesis committee, Dr. E. Duane Elbert and Dr. Wendy Hamand, for their help and comments. To the staffs of the Illinois State Archives and the Illinois State Historical Library for their assistance and to Mr. Charles Hand for proofreading the final draft. Lastly, thanks go to my brother, Jeff, for the use of his computer, which made this work a lot easier, and to my entire family for their encouragement and support.

CHAPTER I

EDGAR COUNTY IN 1861

Edgar County is located in east-central Illinois about halfway between the northern and southern borders of the state and forms part of the state's eastern border with Indiana. The county's size is much the same today as it was in 1861, being nearly twenty-seven miles long by twenty-four miles wide, for a total area of 628 square miles. As in 1861, the county is bounded by Vermilion County on the north, Champaign County on the northwest, Douglas and Coles Counties on the west, Clark County on the south, and the State of Indiana on the east.¹ (See Map 1)

Created on January 3, 1823, the county was named in honor of John Edgar, an early Illinois pioneer, merchant, and land speculator.² When Illinois became a state in 1818, the area which eventually became Edgar County was then a part of Crawford County. In 1819, this territory was part of Clark County, before becoming a separate county in 1823.³

For the most part, Edgar County's physical description is much the same today as it was in 1823. The northern and central portions of the county contain predominantly flat prairie land composed of rich fertile soil. The southern part of the county consists of uneven terrain covered with dense upland timber. This difference in terrain is due to the Shelbyville Moraine which was left after the glacier period.⁴ Cutting across the county in an east-west direction, this moraine divides the county into two very distinctly different terrains.

Originally, the county contained five townships or precincts, as they were called in the mid-1800s. The names of these original precincts were Wayne, Fairfield, Pike, Carroll, and Ripley. Of these, only Ripley was removed from the present boundaries of the county. This precinct encompassed the unorganized territory which stretched as far north as Chicago.⁵

Almost as soon as the county was created, local officials established the seat of government. Although a location and name (Cambridge City) had been chosen in what is now Hunter Township, wise county officials reconsidered their decision and made Paris the county seat.⁶ Located in the south-central portion of the county, Paris soon proved to be an excellent choice of the county officials.

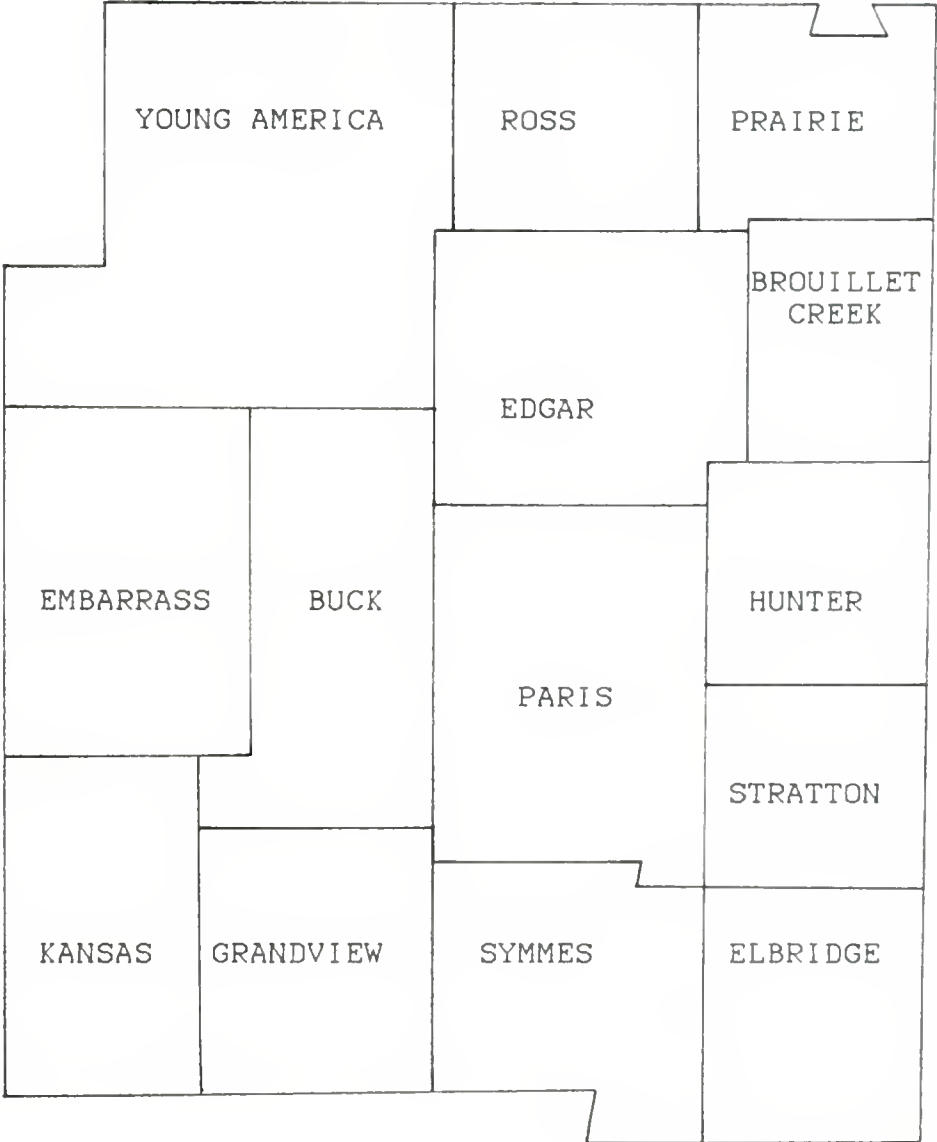

In 1856, the township form of county government was formally adopted by voters in Edgar County by a 1,349 to 971 vote.⁷ At this time, the county was divided into thirteen voting districts or precincts. When the township form of government went into effect, these townships were renamed as follows; Prairie, Ross, Young America, Embarrass, Kansas, Grandview, Symmes, Buck, Edgar, Brouillet Creek, Stratton, Paris, and Elbridge.⁸ In terms of area, most townships were relatively the same size, the exception being Young America which was the largest. The boundaries of these townships are shown in Map 2. In March 1861, a new township was created from the northern part of Stratton and named Hunter.⁹ Thus, Edgar County contained fourteen townships when the Civil War began.

The pattern of settlement in Edgar County generally was from southeast to northwest across the county. However, the first area to be settled was in the northeast part of the county along the timber bordering the "North Arm" of the Grand Prairie.¹⁰ Here, in present day Brouillet Creek and Hunter Townships, the first people settled. Almost at the same time, early pioneers settled in the southern sections of the county. Finding plenty of good timber for building homes, these settlers soon established their farms along Big and Clear Creeks in Symmes and Grandview Townships. After Paris became the county seat, the central portion of the county was settled. The last areas of the county to be settled were the northern and western portions, primarily Embarrass and Young America Townships.

By 1861, Edgar County contained several communities, the largest of which was Paris, the county seat. Easily accessible for persons living in remote parts of the county and well connected by transportation routes, Paris soon became an important trading center for east-central Illinois. Located in the northeast portion of the county were the settlements of Logan and Baldwinville, in Brouillet Creek and Hunter Townships respectively. On the road from Paris to Terre Haute, Indiana was the community of Elbridge. This village served as a post office and trading center for persons living in southeastern Edgar County. North of Elbridge in Stratton Township were the communities of Vermillion and Kentucky. Established only a few years before the railroad (Terre Haute & Aiton) came through, Vermillion by 1861, was already an important shipping center. Also laid out next to the railroad, Kentucky was just beginning to grow in 1861.

North of Paris in Edgar Township was the community of Bloomfield. Located on the Paris to Danville Road, Bloomfield was the largest community in this part of the county. In southwestern Edgar County were located four communities in 1861. The largest and oldest of these was the settlement of Grandview. However, with the coming of the railroad in the mid-1850s, Grandview was by-passed thus, by 1861, it had begun to decline as a population center. North of Grandview were the communities of Conlogue and Dudley. Both had grown almost overnight with the building of the railroad. Farther west of Grandview was the community of Kansas. The building of the railroad through Kansas had insured its growth as an important trading center in western Edgar County. Map 3 shows the location of the various communities referred to above.

Edgar County's population in 1860 was 16,925 persons. This included thirty-seven free Negroes who were living in the county at the time.¹¹ Compared with the other east-central Illinois counties, Edgar was second in total population. Only Vermillion County contained more people in 1860, with 19,800. Both Clark and Coles Counties were relatively even in population with 14,987 and 14,203 respectively. Meanwhile, newly created Douglas County contained only 7,140 persons in 1860.¹²

The ratio of males to females was almost even in Edgar County, with 8,765 males and 8,160 females being reported.¹³ By age, the largest number of people living in Edgar County in 1860 were those between twenty and thirty, with some 3,083 being listed in the census. In fact, most citizens of Edgar County were young. An examination of the census reveals 15,607 persons between the ages of one and fifty living in the county in 1860. This is approximately 92 percent of the total population. In contrast, only 1,318 persons over the age of fifty were living in the county in 1860.¹⁴

Of interest to this paper is the number of white males between the ages of fifteen and fifty. This number is significant because it indicates the number of men who would have been of age to serve in the military. In order to enlist with any military unit serving in the Civil War a recruit must have been at least eighteen but not over forty-five years of age. In 1860, 4,319 white males between the ages of fifteen and fifty were living in the county.¹⁵

Of this number, 980 were between fifteen and twenty, 1,651 were between twenty and thirty, 1,044 were between thirty and forty, and 644 were between forty and fifty. From these totals it is clear that the majority of white males in Edgar County were those between the ages of twenty and forty. Although it is hard to determine the exact number of men, living in Edgar County, who were between eighteen and forty-five, it is safe to say that at least 3,500 males were of military age.

By townships, the population of Edgar County varied considerably. Shown in Table 1 are the population figures for each township of the county. From examining Table 1 it is clear that the townships of Stratton, Paris, Elbridge, Edgar, Kansas, Grandview, and Symmes contained the largest portion of the county's population. In fact, almost 72 percent of the county's total population resided in these townships. However, the remaining townships were not as sparsely populated as these figures might indicate. In 1860, Edgar County's population density was only twenty-seven persons per square mile.¹⁶ Compared with other surrounding counties, only Clark County contained a greater density with almost thirty persons per square mile being reported.¹⁷

According to the 1860 census, 16,259 Edgar Countians listed their birthplace as being the United States.¹⁸ This is almost 96 percent of the county's total population. Table 2 lists the number of native and foreign born residents, by township, who were living in Edgar County in 1860.

Of the native born citizens, most listed the State of Illinois as their birthplace. However, a large number were born in the states of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, and Virginia. Other states listed in the census as birthplaces included Pennsylvania, New York, North Carolina, Tennessee, New Jersey, and Maryland.¹⁹ States of the deep South and New England areas were also listed; however, the number listed as being born in these states was minimal.

Even though most Edgar Countians in 1860 were born in the United States, 666 listed their birthplace as being a foreign country.²⁰ This number represents about 4 percent of the county's total population. The small number of foreign born residents living in Edgar County in 1860 is not surprising since almost all east-central Illinois counties reported fewer than 10 percent foreign born in 1860.²¹ Of those born overseas, 383 were born in Ireland, 139 in Germany, and sixty-six in England. Other countries listed in the census as birthplaces included France, Scotland, Poland, Sweden, and Canada.²²

Edgar Countians were predominantly Protestant in 1860. Thirty-eight churches were located in the county at this time, with the number of members totaling 13,350. Of this number, 1,200 belonged to the three Presbyterian Churches while another 900 were members of the two Roman Catholic Churches. The eight Christian Churches contained 2,400 members, while 2,100 persons belonged to the seven Baptist Churches. The remaining 6,750 persons were all members of the eighteen Methodist Churches.²³

In 1860, Edgar Countians were primarily employed in agricultural related occupations. Table 3 lists the number of agricultural occupations, the number of total occupations, as well as the percentage for each township in the county.

According to this table, some 2,855 Edgar Countians listed their occupation as being farm related in 1860.²⁴ This was 78 percent of the 3,646 who reported their occupations. Thus, almost eight out of every ten Edgar Countians were employed in agricultural-related occupations when the Civil War began.

Other occupations listed in the 1860 census included carpenters, laborers, teamsters, lawyers, teachers, blacksmiths, coopers, hotel keepers, as well as many other typical mid-nineteenth century occupations.²⁵ In the townships containing larger communities, a wider variety of occupations were listed in the census. For example, in

Paris, occupations listed included booksellers, bankers, jewelers, lawyers, merchants, doctors, tailors, artists, and clerks.²⁶ In some townships, such as Buck, almost every occupation listed in the census was related to agriculture.²⁷

As mentioned above, Edgar County was strictly an agricultural county in 1860. Early pioneers had transformed the county's vast prairie lands into large productive farms in just a matter of years. By the year 1860, over 200,000 acres of land was under cultivation in Edgar County. However, the amount of unimproved land still totaled 96,199 acres. The remaining acres were taken up with forests. In 1860, the cash value of farmland in Edgar County was worth well over $5 million, or approximately $25 an acre.²⁸

The number of individual farms in Edgar County at this time totaled 1,408. Of this number, 1,340 were large farms of between twenty and five-hundred acres in size. Only forty-seven farms of over five-hundred acres existed, with ten of these containing over one-thousand acres. Twenty-one farms with less than twenty acres were listed in the census.²⁹

The types of crops grown on these farms were much the same as those being grown elsewhere in the country at the time. Wheat was the principle crop grown in Edgar County with over 130,000 bushels being harvested in 1860. Other crops included corn, oats, rye, tobacco, barley, sweet potatoes, and potatoes. In addition, such items as cheese, butter, wine, maple sugar, sorghum, and flax were also produced on farms in Edgar County.³⁰ Many Edgar County farmers found that raising livestock could be very profitable as well. Over 41,000 head of swine, 13,000 head of cattle, and 19,000 head of sheep were being raised in the county in 1860, with a reported value of over $1 million dollars.³¹

As early as 1820, the first grist mill opened in northeastern Edgar County on Brouillett's Creek. Likewise, a mill was opened a few years later in Elbridge Township along Sugar Creek.³² In 1860, a total of fifty-six manufacturing establishments were in operation in Edgar County. Of this number, approximately twenty types of industry were represented. Most were typical mid-nineteenth century businesses such as agricultural equipment manufacturers, carriage builders, flour mills, distilleries, saw mills, and printing shops.³³ The annual value of the goods produced by these manufacturers was well over $300,000, while the amount of capital invested totaled over $124,000.³⁴ An examination of the census shows that Edgar Countians owned over $7 million worth of property in 1860, while the value of their personal property was over $3 million.³⁵

As agriculture and industry expanded there was a need for better transportation in the county. By 1861, Edgar County was well-connected with transportation routes. The principle roads in the county connected Paris with Danville, Marshall, Charleston, Springfield, and Terre Haute, Indiana. In addition, many other roads connected various sections of the county with Paris.³⁶ Besides roads, one rail line passed through the county in 1861. Chartered in 1851 as the Terre Haute and Alton Railroad, this line was finished through Edgar County in 1853 and began operation the next year.³⁷ Map 3 shows the location of this line along with the principle roads which existed in 1861.

From examining the various demographic statistics discussed in this chapter, one gets a feeling for the typical Edgar County soldier's background. More than likely, he was born in the United States, probably within the county. A few, however, were born overseas with the largest group being from Ireland. Religiously, the typical Edgar Countian was Protestant by faith, although a few Catholics enlisted as well. According to the population figures, the largest number of volunteers available were living in the townships of Grandview, Paris, Edgar, Elbridge, Stratton, and Kansas.

By cross-checking the names of those known to have served in the war with their ages in the 1860 Census, one can determine the average age of the typical Edgar County volunteer as being twenty-five years old in 1863.³⁸ This is consistent with that of most northern soldiers according to Bell Wiley. In his The Life of Billy Yank, Wiley quotes the research of Benjamin A. Gould as showing that the age of the average Union soldier was 25.76 in July 1863, the mid-point of the war.³⁹

Wiley also wrote that the educational backgrounds for the average Union soldier "ranged from no-schooling at all to the highest levels of specialized training."⁴⁰ However, it is hard to determine what kind of educational training the average soldier from Edgar County had. In 1824, the first school opened in Paris, and two years later the first school district was organized in the county. However, it was not until the passage of the Free School Law in 1855, that schools became widespread across the county.⁴¹ The first school commissioner in the county was Sheridan P. Read, who was later killed at the Battle of Stones River. In his report to state officials in 1858, Read wrote that, "under the present law there has been a great improvement in the schools of this county . . . I do not fear that Edgar County will Take a high stand in educational matters hereafter."⁴² Judging from this statement then, the average Edgar County soldier probably had at least some form of educational training.

By occupation, the average soldier was more than likely a farmer or farm laborer. Again, this is consistent with most northern soldiers. According to Wiley, "the most numerous groups of volunteers were farmers, who comprised nearly half the total."⁴³ However, those volunteers who lived in Paris or one of the other communities of the county were employed in a variety of occupations ranging from doctors and lawyers to merchants.

In summary, the average volunteer from Edgar County was actually no different than other soldiers from small midwestern agricultural counties. Therefore, the military contributions that these soldiers made to the war should have been consistent with that made by soldiers from other midwestern counties. However, this author has found that Edgar County made a significant contribution to the Civil War.

CHAPTER II

EDGAR COUNTY'S MILITARY CONTRIBUTION

Edgar County is credited with contributing 2,312 men to the Union forces during the Civil War. According to official records, this was just sixty shy of the established quota (of 2,372) for the county.¹ By comparing the number of men serving with those considered eligible, a percentage is obtained which indicates how much contribution the county gave to the war effort. In 1865, the Illinois Adjutant General's Office reported that 3,065 Edgar Countians were considered eligible for military duty.² Dividing 2,312 by 3,065 yields 75 percent, which indicates that three out of every four men who were eligible to serve from Edgar County did so.

Comparing the total number of enrollments with the number of males available is another way of determining the county's contribution. Through the Military Census of October 1862, the township assessors, in Edgar County, reported 1,395 men who were serving in the war out of 4,118 who were considered eligible.³ This is approximately 34 percent, or one out of every three males considered eligible. However, one must remember that these figures are for 1862, and that there were still many more volunteers who enlisted after this date. Table 4 lists the number of men serving, eligible to serve and the percentage for each township of the county. From this table the reader can see which townships had contributed the greatest or least number of men to the war effort as of October 1862.

*Hunter Township had been created in March, 1861.

From examining Table 4, it is obvious which townships actually contributed more to the war effort than the county average (34%) in 1862. One such township was Stratton, which had the highest percentage of men serving, in 1862, with fifty-four percent. However, in the 1879 History of Edgar County, it is stated that, "Kansas claims to be the banner township in the part taken in the suppression of the rebellion No doubt, in proportion to the number of inhabitants, this township did turn out more soldiers than any other."⁴ Kansas Township had, in fact, contributed 43 percent of its available manpower as of October 1862.

Another indication of the county's contribution can be shown by comparing the number of credited enrollments as of January 1865, with the number of males of military age living in the county in 1860. In January 1865, 3,343 males were credited with enrolling from the county. In 1860, 4,319 males were living within Edgar County. Dividing 3,343 by 4,319 yields 77 percent, which is fairly close to the percentage obtained when dividing the number of men credited with serving (2,312) by those eligible (3,065).⁵ Thus, it could be said that Edgar County contributed approximately three-quarters of its eligible manpower to the war effort.

The structure of the basic Civil War unit was relatively simple. Each infantry regiment consisted of ten companies of approximately one-hundred men each. Thus, the effective strength, including staff officers, was just over one-thousand men. However, not all units were able to achieve this total, but some even surpassed it. The individual companies were assigned the letters A to K, with J being disregarded because of its similarity with the letter I, thus, preventing any confusion. In cavalry units there were usually twelve companies of one-hundred men each, lettered from A to M, with J again being passed-over.⁶

Although the majority of soldiers from Edgar County were privates, a number served as officers of their respective Civil War units. Of these, the largest number were corporals. In fact, over one-hundred Edgar Countians served as corporals during the war. Over sixty others were enlisted as sergeants and approximately twenty-five served as captains. Other Edgar Countians served as lieutenants, musicians, wagoners, surgeons, buglers, farriers, hospital stewards, chaplains, and adjutants to name just a few ranks. Only three Edgar Countians achieved the rank of colonel during the Civil War. Colonels Sheridan P. Read (79th Illinois), John W.S. Alexander (21st Illinois), and Andrew K. Campbell (66th Illinois) were all promoted in the field. Of these three, only Campbell lived to see the end of the war. However, he died in 1867 from wounds received at Atlanta.

Of the 2,312 men from Edgar County credited with serving in the Civil War, almost three-quarters enlisted with units from Illinois. In fact, over eighty different units from Illinois contained Edgar County men.⁷ Of these, several contained large numbers of Edgar Countians. Other units, however, contained only a few men from the county. Table 5 lists those regiments which contained large numbers of Edgar County men, along with the principle company or companies and the known number of Edgar Countians in each.

To evaluate the contribution made to the war by the Edgar Countians enrolled in these units, brief regimental histories have been included in this paper. Emphasis, however, has been placed upon the role Edgar Countians played towards the outfit's overall contribution to the war. In selecting which of these units had the best or worst contribution to the war, one is faced with making judgements based solely on a personal basis. Thus, it is almost impossible objectively to list the best or worst Edgar County regiment. However, with these regimental histories one can get a feeling for how well some of these regiments, and consequently the Edgar Countians in them, performed.

The Twelfth Illinois Infantry Regiment was originally mustered into service for three months in April 1861. However, when the three-month period of service expired on August 1, 1861, the unit was re-mustered as a three-year unit. The three-year regiment, (also known as the First Scotch Regiment),⁸ was comprised of companies recruited from throughout the state. Many volunteers from Edgar County enrolled in Company E, which was first commanded by Captain Vincent Ridgely of Springfield. Upon his resignation in early October 1861, Captain Henry Van Sellar of Paris assumed command of the company.⁹ Van Sellar had been a prominent lawyer in Paris before enlisting in the service.¹⁰

Enrolled in Company E were well over one-hundred volunteers from Edgar County. Of this number, the largest number resided in the townships of Kansas, Grandview, and Paris. Almost all of the company's officers were Edgar Countians, with most being promoted later in the war. Eight members of Company E killed during the war were from Edgar County and only one of two deserters were from the county. Very few men in the company died or were discharged while in the service and a large number of Edgar Countians re-enlisted and eventually mustered out with the regiment.¹¹

One of the first battles in which this regiment participated in was at Fort Donelson. Here, Private Tobias Bower (Company E), became one of the first Edgar County soldiers of the regiment killed in action.¹² At the Battle of Shiloh the unit suffered over thirty casualties, including Private James F. Stout (Company E) of Paris.¹³ In late April 1862, the regiment was moved to Corinth, Mississippi where it was actively involved during the siege of Corinth. The unit then participated in the Battle of Corinth, where it suffered twenty-seven casualties, including three more Edgar Countians of Company E (Privates John S. Evans, Isaac J. McCormick, and Albert G. Roberts).¹⁴

On January 16, 1864, at Pulaski, Tennessee the regiment re-enlisted as a veteran unit and two days later some three-hundred men started for Illinois on veteran furlough. After re-grouping at Camp Fry (Chicago), Illinois, the veterans proceeded back to Pulaski in mid-March. During the Atlanta Campaign, the unit participated in engagements at Lay's Ferry, Rome Crossroads, Dallas, Bald Knob, Decatur, and Ezra Church in Georgia. Killed on this campaign were two more Edgar Countians of Company E; Private Henry B. Hall at Alatoona Pass and Private John W. Athon at Atlanta.¹⁵

In November 1864, the regiment started out with General William Sherman on his famous "march to the sea." On May 24th the 12th Illinois participated in the Grand Review held in Washington, D.C., then left for Louisville, Kentucky arriving in early June. Here, the unit was mustered out of service on July 10, 1865. The men received their final pay and were discharged at Camp Butler, Illinois eight days later.

The Twenty-First Illinois Infantry Regiment was originally mustered into service for thirty days by Captain Ulysses S. Grant on May 15, 1861. All of the companies were recruited in counties which comprised the Seventh Congressional District.¹⁶ Edgar Countians primarily enrolled in Company F which was commanded by Captain Enoch Woody of Paris. In late June 1861, the regiment was mustered into United States service for three years. U.S. Grant was by then a colonel in the regiment and remained in command of the unit until he was appointed, by President Lincoln, to the rank of brigadier general. Upon Grant's leaving the regiment, John W.S. Alexander of Paris was promoted colonel.¹⁷

The over eighty Edgar Countians enrolled in Company F were almost all from Paris and Stratton Townships. The officers of the company were also from the county. Twelve of those killed in the company were from Edgar County, with seven meeting their deaths at the Battle of Stones River. However, many more men died of wounds or disease than were killed on the battlefield. Two of the company's three deserters were from the county.¹⁸

One of the unit's first encounters with the enemy occurred at Iuka, Mississippi in August 1862. Killed here was Private John Buntain (Company F) of Paris.¹⁹ On October 8, 1862, the regiment was engaged at the Battle of Perryville, Kentucky. Company F, now being commanded by Captain David S. Blackburn of Paris, was one of the first units to enter the captured city.²⁰ At the Battle of Stones River (December 31, 1862 - January 2, 1863), the regiment was severely engaged, suffering over three-hundred casualties.²¹ Among those killed were seven Edgar Countians all of Company F.²² In March 1863, the unit was involved in a skirmish at Gay's Gap, Tennessee losing Private Elijah Milam Jr. of Edgar County, who was killed.²³

At the Battle of Chickamauga (September 19 and 20, 1863) the regiment was again severely tested and suffered 238 casualties as a result.²⁴ Among those killed were four Edgar County members of the regiment including Colonel Alexander.²⁵ In early 1864, the regiment re-enlisted and after spending a month on furlough, the veterans rejoined the unit at Kenesaw Mountain, Georgia. In late July 1864, the unit was engaged on the outer lines of Atlanta, where it participated in the Battle of Jonesboro on September 1, 1864.

During the Battle of Franklin, Tennessee (November 30, 1864) the regiment was briefly engaged before being withdrawn to Nashville. In June 1865, the regiment was assigned to the First Division of the Fourth Army Corps and sent to Texas. The regiment was then mustered out of service on December 16, 1865. Approximately a month later the unit arrived back at Camp Butler, Illinois where the men received their final pay and were discharged.

The Twenty-Fifth Illinois Infantry Regiment was mustered into service on August 4, 1861, at St. Louis, Missouri. The regiment was comprised primarily of volunteers from counties in east-central Illinois.²⁶ Both Companies A and D contained many volunteers from the northern part of Edgar County, with Company D being commanded by Captain William Osborn of Bloomfield.²⁷

Of the fifty-two Edgar County volunteers who enlisted in the 25th Illinois, most were from the Bloomfield and Logan areas of the county. Although the regiment participated in many battles, only one Edgar County soldier of the unit was killed in action during the war. However, several members of this unit died while serving in the war.²⁸

On March 7th and 8th, 1862, the regiment was engaged at the Battle of Pea Ridge, Arkansas, where it suffered twenty-four casualties.²⁹ In late November Samuel Mitchell of Edgar County assumed command of Company A after the company's original captain, Charles Clark, was killed in action.³⁰ Captain William Osborn of Company D resigned in late December and was replaced by Allen Varner also of Edgar County.³¹

The regiment performed well at the Battle of Stones River (December 31, 1862 - January 2, 1863) where it was under enemy fire nearly the entire three days of fighting. However, the unit suffered relatively few casualties as only ninety-six were reported.³² On September 19, 1863, the unit became engaged at the Battle of Chickamauga, losing over two-hundred casualties including Private George W. Staats (Company A) of Bloomfield.³³ When the Atlanta Campaign began, the 25th Illinois was there, however, it did not see any major action. On August 1, 1864, while camped within sight of Atlanta, the three-year period of service expired and the unit was ordered to return to Camp Butler, Illinois for mustering out, which occurred on September 5, 1864. As a result, the unit's brief career was over. A few Edgar Countians of the 25th eventually re-enlisted with other units, but most simply "gave up" soldiering.

On August 19, 1861, the Twenty-Ninth Illinois Infantry Regiment was mustered into service at Camp Butler, Illinois. This regiment was mainly comprised of companies recruited from the southern part of the state.³⁴ Company H, however, was made up of volunteers from Edgar County and was commanded by Captain Jason B. Sprague of Brouillet Creek Township.

Like the 25th Illinois, most of those Edgar Countians in the 29th were from the Logan and Bloomfield areas. Many officers of the company were from the county as well, including three lieutenants. A total of nine Edgar Countians in the company were killed during the war, in addition to several who died. Many of those from the county re-enlisted and mustered out with the regiment, and surprisingly no deserters in the company were reported during the war.³⁵

At the Battle of Fort Donelson, Tennessee, the regiment suffered over one-hundred casualties, including thirty who were killed in action.³⁶ Killed here were four members of Company H, all from the Bloomfield area of Edgar County.³⁷ In March 1862, the regiment departed for Pittsburg Landing, Tennessee where it participated in the Battle of Shiloh (April 6th and 7th). Here the regiment again suffered over one-hundred casualties. Among the unit's casualties were four Edgar Countians who were killed, including Captain Jason B. Sprague (Company H).³⁸ Captain Robert Collins of Bloomfield then assumed command of the company.

On October 19, 1863 the 131st Illinois was consolidated with the 29th, and in January 1864, the combined regiment re-enlisted as a veteran organization. A year later the outfit embarked for New Orleans, before being sent to Mobile, Alabama. Here the unit took an active part in the sieges of Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely, Alabama. In April the regiment was sent to Texas where it arrived in July. Remaining here until November, the unit was then mustered out of service. Returning to Camp Butler, the men received their final pay and were discharged on November 28, 1865.

The Thirty-Fourth Illinois Infantry Regiment was organized and mustered into service by Colonel Edward N. Kirk on September 7, 1861. Most of the unit was recruited from the Rock River Valley of northern Illinois, thus the nickname of the "Rock River Regiment" was given to the unit.³⁹ Company K, however, was recruited mainly in the southwestern part of Edgar County with Captain Orson Q. Herrick of Kansas commanding.

Company K was almost entirely comprised of volunteers from Kansas and Grandview Townships. A few of the company's officers were, in fact, Edgar Countians as well. Later in the war, Captain Herrick was promoted to the rank of regimental surgeon.⁴⁰ A total of three Edgar Countians in the company were killed during the war, with only one deserter being reported. When the regiment re-enlisted, many new draftees and recruits from Edgar County joined the regiment. Most of these new recruits were assigned to other companies of the unit.⁴¹

At the Battle of Shiloh in early April 1862, the unit was heavily engaged, suffering over one-hundred casualties, including two Edgar Countians of Company K who were killed.⁴² During the first day of battle at Stones River, the 34th Illinois was positioned on the right of the Union lines where it was brigaded together with its sister unit, the 79th Illinois.⁴³ Totally routed by the rebels, the 34th fled in retreat, losing over sixty men who were captured by the enemy.⁴⁴ Surprisingly, Company K emerged with relatively minor casualties.

In June 1863, the regiment engaged the enemy at Liberty

Gap, Tennessee losing some twenty-nine casualties in the process.⁴⁵ In late December 1863, the regiment re-enlisted as a veteran unit and the veterans were given a furlough home. On June 27, 1864, the regiment led the Union assault upon Kenesaw Mountain, then participated in the siege of Atlanta. While fighting in the Battle of Jonesboro, Georgia Private William H. Steepleton of Kansas was killed in action.⁴⁶

The regiment also participated in General William T. Sherman's "march to the sea" and continued on, with the Army, through the Carolinas. The unit then took part in the Grand Review held in Washington, D.C. on May 24, 1865, before leaving for Louisville, Kentucky where it was mustered out of service. The men received their final pay and were discharged at Chicago, Illinois on July 17, 1865.

The Fifty-Fourth Illinois Infantry Regiment was organized at Camp Dubois (Anna), Illinois in November 1861, and mustered into service on February 18, 1862. The entire regiment was comprised of companies recruited from counties in the east-central part of the state.⁴⁷ Primarily, Edgar County natives enlisted in Company F, although several enrolled in Company K. Captain John B. Hannah of Paris was the commander of Company F.

Most of the men in Company F were from Paris, with some Bloomfield natives also being listed. None of those in Companies F and K were killed during the war, and few died while in the service. The unit's most "famous" role of the war occurred at the infamous Charleston, Illinois "riot" in March 1864.⁴⁸

In late May 1863, the regiment participated in the Union siege of Vicksburg, Mississippi before being sent to Arkansas as part of the expedition against Little Rock. In January 1864, the unit re-enlisted and veterans were given a furlough home. It was during the unit's re-assembling that the Charleston "riot" occurred. On March 28, 1864, a band of Copperheads opened fire on a group of soldiers of the 54th in downtown Charleston, Illinois. When the shooting had stopped, nine people were dead, including some soldiers of the 54th. Among these was Major Shubal York (Regimental Surgeon) of Paris.⁴⁹

After returning to Little Rock, the regiment was sent to Brownsville, Arkansas where it conducted a pursuit of Confederate General Joseph Shelby's Army. Upon returning to Little Rock in October, the regiment was mustered out of service. After traveling back to Camp Butler the men were discharged and issued their final pay.

The Fifty-Ninth Illinois Infantry Regiment was originally organized and mustered into service as the Ninth Missouri Infantry on September 18, 1861, at St. Louis, Missouri. The unit, however, was primarily comprised of companies raised in the state of Illinois.⁵⁰ Company H of the regiment contained over seventy volunteers from Edgar

County and was commanded by Captain Albert Anthony of Kansas. Most of those enlisting in the company were from Kansas, with a few Paris natives also enrolling. Only two Edgar County members of the company were killed during the entire war. In addition, only one Edgar Countian was listed as being a deserter. Most of the company's volunteers re-enlisted and mustered out with the regiment, with very few dying or being discharged.⁵¹

In early February 1862, by an order of the War Department, the 9th Missouri was changed to the 59th Illinois.⁵² The unit then proceeded towards Arkansas where it participated in the Battle of Pea Ridge on March 7th and 8th reporting over sixty casualties including Privates John W. Hurst and William H. Smith both of Kansas and members of Company H.⁵³ The unit then took part in the Battle of Perryville, Kentucky (October 8th) where it suffered over one-hundred casualties.⁵⁴ In late December the regiment participated in the Battle of Stones River where it suffered another eighty casualties.⁵⁵ Fortunately, no Edgar Countians were killed at Perryville or Stones River.

The regiment then set out on the Tullahoma Campaign in June 1863, and encountered the enemy at Liberty Gap, Tennessee. The unit also participated in the siege of Chattanooga, Tennessee, before starting out on the Lookout Mountain Campaign in late November 1863. The unit was then sent to the battlefield at Chickamauga, where it was assigned the unpleasant task of burying the dead left from the battle in September.⁵⁶ In mid-January 1864, after returning to Chattanooga, the regiment re-enlisted as a veteran unit. During the Atlanta Campaign the regiment encountered the enemy at Tunnel Hill, Rocky Faced Ridge, and Resaca.

While the unit was stationed at Columbia, Tennessee it was attacked by rebel forces on November 27, 1864, killing Recruit George W. Ingram (Company K) of Prairie Township.⁵⁷ In the last weeks of 1864, the regiment participated in the Battles of Franklin and Nashville, Tennessee where it fought courageously. In April 1865, the regiment was sent to Texas and after arriving in San Antonio, was stationed at New Braunfels. Here, on December 8, 1865, the regiment was mustered out of service. After traveling back to Springfield, Illinois, the men received their final pay and were discharged.

The Sixty-Second Illinois Infantry Regiment was organized at Camp Dubois (Anna), Illinois on April 10, 1862. This regiment was recruited primarily in the counties from the southern part of the state. However, Company K contained many volunteers from Edgar County.⁵⁸ Those enrolled in this company were from various parts of the county, with several being from Grandview Township. Surprisingly, no Edgar Countians in the regiment were killed during the war and very few died while serving with this unit.⁵⁹

In late April the regiment was sent to Cairo, Illinois where it remained two weeks before being sent to Paducah, Kentucky. The regiment also participated in brief excursions to Grand Junction and Holly Springs, Mississippi. In April 1863, the unit was sent to LaGrange, Tennessee, where it remained until August. After being sent to Arkansas in the late summer, the outfit engaged the enemy at Brownsville on September 10th. The regiment then drove the enemy from Little Rock, Arkansas and forced the evacuation of that city.

In early January 1864, the unit re-enlisted as a veteran organization and was moved to Pine Bluff, Arkansas, where it spent eight months in camp. While in camp here, several Edgar Countians died from an outbreak of disease.⁶⁰ In November 1864, all non-veterans were ordered to return to Illinois for mustering out. The remaining men were then consolidated into seven companies and remained at Pine Bluff until July 1865. The regiment was then sent to Fort Gibson, Cherokee Nation (Oklahoma), where it remained until March 1866. The unit was mustered out of service at Little Rock, and after returning to Springfield in late March, the men received their final pay and were discharged.

Originally, the Sixty-Fourth Illinois Infantry Regiment (also known as "Yate's Sharpshooters")⁶¹ was comprised of only six companies. The unit was mustered into service in December 1861, at Camp Butler, Illinois. In January 1864, the regiment re-enlisted and four more companies joined the outfit.⁶² One of these was Company H, which was comprised primarily of Edgar Countians. Captain John H. Stoner of Paris was the company's commander. In keeping with the theme of this paper, only the regimental history of the unit after January 1864, will be discussed. Prior to this, however, the unit had a colorful and distinguished career.

Almost all of those in the company were from the western townships of Buck, Grandview, and Kansas, with many serving as officers. Although several Edgar Countians in the company died during their short period of service, only three were killed in action. Two of these were killed at the Battle of Kenesaw Mountain. The majority of volunteers either were discharged or mustered out with the regiment.⁶³

On March 17, 1864, the regiment set out for Decatur, Alabama and in early May joined General William T. Sherman's Army near Chattanooga, Tennessee. The regiment then took part in the Battle of Kenesaw Mountain on June 27, 1864, reporting fifty-seven men killed and wounded, including Privates Nathan O. Wilber and Josiah Mishler both of Company H and from Paris.⁶⁴ In mid-July 1864, the unit set out for Atlanta where it was involved in the battle here on the 22nd of the month. The unit again suffered heavily here as over one-hundred casualties were reported, including Captain Stoner of Company H.⁶⁵

In November the unit started with General William

Sherman on his "march to the sea." At the conclusion of the war, the regiment participated in the Grand Review held in Washington, D.C. on May 24th. In early June the unit returned to Louisville, Kentucky where it was mustered out of service. On July 18, 1865, the men received their final pay and were discharged at Chicago, Illinois.

The Sixty-Sixth Illinois Infantry Regiment was originally organized as the Fourteenth Missouri Infantry at Benton Barracks (St. Louis), Missouri during the fall of 1861. Designated as a regiment of western sharpshooters, the unit was commonly referred to as "Birge's Sharpshooters."⁶⁶ Eight companies of the outfit were recruited from the midwestern states of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Missouri, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Ohio. Company E was recruited in Edgar County, with Captain Andrew K. Campbell of Paris commanding.

Almost two-hundred men from the county were enrolled in this company, making it the second largest contingent of Edgar Countians to serve in one unit. Most of these volunteers were from the western townships of Grandview, Buck, and Kansas. Originally, only one officer in the regiment was from Edgar County. This was Chaplain James M. Alexander of Paris. Later, Chaplain Alexander was promoted colonel of the 1st Alabama Artillery regiment. Only one volunteer from Edgar County was killed during the war, yet several died during the unit's term of service. Several

Edgar Countians in the company re-enlisted with the regiment and mustered out.⁶⁷

The first major action that Birge's Sharpshooters experienced was at the Battle of Fort Donelson in February 1862. After moving to Pittsburg Landing, Tennessee in early March, the unit participated in the Battle of Shiloh on April 6th and 7th, 1862. Before the battle, the unit's name had been changed to that of the 14th Missouri Infantry.⁶⁸

In April the regiment moved to Corinth, Mississippi where it remained until August. After brief excursions to Glendale and Iuka, Mississippi, the regiment returned to Corinth taking part in the battle here on October 3rd and 4th. In late November, by an order of Governor Richard Yates of Illinois and Secretary of War Edwin Stanton, the name of the unit was again changed to that of the 66th Illinois Infantry Regiment.⁶⁹

In early November, the regiment departed for Pulaski, Tennessee where it re-enlisted as a veteran organization. At this time, a majority of the men in the regiment purchased their own Henry repeating rifles. With the death of Colonel Patrick Burke on May 20, 1864, Captain Andrew K. Campbell (Company E) of Paris was promoted colonel of the regiment.⁷⁰ The unit then started out on the the Atlanta Campaign and was heavily engaged at Rome, Georgia. Private John M. York (Company E) of Paris was among those killed here.⁷¹ At the Battle of Kenesaw Mountain the unit was again engaged with the enemy. Here Private John H. Lorimer (Company G) of Edgar County was killed in action.⁷²

In late August those volunteers whose enlistment terms had expired, were mustered out of service, and after the fall of Atlanta, the remainder of the unit participated in General Sherman's "march to the sea." At the end of the war the regiment marched in the Grand Review held in Washington. From Washington the unit returned to Camp Logan, Kentucky and was mustered out of service on June 7, 1865. Eight days later the men were discharged and issued their final pay at Camp Butler, Illinois.

The Seventy-Ninth Illinois Infantry Regiment was organized by Colonel Lyman Guinnip of Mattoon, Illinois and mustered into service on August 28, 1862, at Danville, Illinois.⁷³ The entire regiment was comprised of companies recruited in east-central Illinois counties.⁷⁴ More specifically, a total of four companies (A, C, D, and H) were made up solely of volunteers from Edgar County. The 350 plus men in these four companies alone represent almost a third of the regiment's total aggregate strength.⁷⁵ This was, by far, the greatest concentration of men from Edgar County in any regiment. A few of the regiment's staff officers were from Edgar County, including Lieutenant Colonels Sheridan P. Read and Henry E. Rives of Paris. Read had been a prominent lawyer in Paris prior to enlisting in the regiment.⁷⁶

Company A of the regiment was mainly comprised of volunteers from the northern portions of the county and was commanded by Captain Terrence Clark of Ross Township. Several in the company were killed or died from wounds received in battle. Those killed sacrificed their lives at such battles as Stones River, Liberty Gap and Resaca.⁷⁷

In Company C were many volunteers from Paris, Stratton, and Elbridge Townships. Commanded by Captain David S. Curtis of Paris, this company's entire staff was made up of Edgar Countians. In fact, of the ninety-two men enrolled in this company, eighty-eight were from Edgar County. As with Company A, many in Company C were killed at the battles of Stones River, Liberty Gap, Kenesaw Mountain, and Chickamauga. In addition, many more died from wounds received in combat and only one volunteer from Edgar County was listed as deserting, the army, from this company.⁷⁸

In Company D were enlisted some ninety-eight volunteers from Edgar County. Most of these men were from the Paris, Bloomfield, and Logan areas of the county. Captain Thomas A. Young of Paris was the unit's commander. Not as many Edgar Countians in this company were killed on the battlefield as those reported in Companies A and C. However, several died during the war from diseases and wounds received in various battles. Again, only one Edgar Countian was listed as deserting from this company.⁷⁹

Volunteers in Company H were from the western portion of the county, particularly Kansas Township. Eighty-six of the company's one-hundred and one members were from Edgar County. Although only five members of the unit were killed in combat, many more died while in the service. Led by Captain Willis O. Pinnell of Kansas, all of the company's officers were from the county.⁸⁰

After being sent to Louisville, Kentucky, the unit marched throughout Kentucky, finally arriving at Nashville, Tennessee in early November. During the march to Nashville, Colonel Lyman Guinnip resigned and Lt. Colonel Sheridan Read was promoted as colonel.⁸¹ At the Battle of Stones River (December 31, 1862 - January 2, 1863), the regiment was positioned on the Union right, where it was brigaded with its sister unit, the 34th Illinois. As the battle progressed and the right wing was swept from the field, the 79th suffered over two-hundred casualties.⁸² Among those killed were eleven Edgar Countians including Colonel Read.⁸³

During the winter of 1862-63, the regiment remained in camp at Murfreesboro and in the spring set out toward Liberty Gap, Tennessee, participating in the battle here on June 25, 1863. The regiment suffered forty-seven casualties at Liberty Gap, including five killed.⁸⁴ Four of these were from Edgar County, including Captain John H. Patton (Company C) of Paris.⁸⁵

The regiment then participated in the Battle of Chickamauga, Georgia on September 19 and 20, 1863. Here the unit suffered over one-hundred casualties, including two more Edgar Countians.⁸⁶ In late November 1863, the regiment took part in the campaign of Chattanooga. Killed at the Battle of Missionary Ridge was Private Asa Williams (Company H) of Kansas.⁸⁷ The regiment then started out on the Atlanta Campaign in early May 1864. On this campaign the unit participated in engagements at Rocky Faced Ridge, Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain, Dallas, Peachtree Creek, Atlanta, Lovejoy Station, and Jonesboro. Among those killed on this campaign were three soldiers from Edgar County. Private Barnard Carr (Company C) of Embarrass Township met his death at the Battle of Kenesaw Mountain, while Privates Pleasant Hendricks (Company H) of Kansas and John Fregon (Company A) of Ross Twonship were both killed at Resaca.⁸⁸

On November 30, 1864, the regiment took part in the Battle of Franklin, Tennessee, and after falling back to Nashville, participated in the Battle of Nashville on December 15th and 16th. Killed at the Battle of Franklin was Private James M. Burket (Company C) of Paris.⁸⁹ The unit was mustered out of service on June 12, 1865, at Nashville. Upon their arrival at Camp Butler, Illinois the men were discharged and issued their final pay.

The Seventh Illinois Cavalry Regiment was organized and mustered into service on October 31, 1861, at Camp Butler, Illinois. This regiment was mainly comprised of companies recruited from throughout the state.⁹⁰ Company A, however, was primarily made up of volunteers from Edgar County, with Captain William D. Blackburn of Paris as the company's commander.

Over one-hundred Edgar Countians enlisted in Company A, and although the company's combat record was not as glorious as other units, it still was significant. The role played by Edgar Countians in the regiment's most famous campaign is testimony to this. During "Grierson's Raid" through Mississippi in 1863, several Edgar Countians played prominent roles, including Sergeant Richard Surby and Captain William D. Blackburn, whose names are forever etched into the unit's history.⁹¹ Although only two Edgar Countians of Company A were killed in action during the war, many others died from wounds or disease.

Early in the spring of 1862, the regiment joined other Federal forces in marching to New Madrid, Missouri. With the evacuation of Corinth, Mississippi, the 7th Illinois Cavalry defended the Memphis and Charleston Railroad from Tuscumbia to Decatur, Alabama. While engaged in a skirmish in late August, Private Amanda G. Tweedy of Paris was mortally wounded.⁹² During this time, the unit participated in the Battles of Iuka (September 19) and Corinth (October 3rd and 4th), Mississippi.

On January 1, 1863, the regiment returned to LaGrange, Tennessee and was brigaded together with the 2nd Iowa Cavalry and 6th Illinois Cavalry regiments. Under the command of Colonel Henry B. Grierson, the units left LaGrange for Baton Rouge, Louisiana on the now famous "Grierson Raid," on April 17, 1863. In just over fifteen days the regiments were able to drive deep into the heart of Confederate held territory and wreak havoc upon the countryside.

After remaining at Baton Rouge for two weeks, the combined regiments moved north to occupy Port Hudson, Mississippi and took part in the Battle of Plain's Store. In May 1863, Major William Blackburn of Paris died of wounds he received during Grierson's raid.⁹³ With the fall of Vicksburg and Port Hudson in July 1863, Grierson's command was ordered to Memphis, Tennessee where it was assigned to railroad duty along the Memphis and Charleston Railroad. In March 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as a veteran unit. At this time, many new recruits from Edgar County joined the regiment.

During the Battle of Franklin, Tennessee (November 30) the regiment charged a division of rebel infantry and drove it back across the Harpeth River. At the Battle of Nashville (December 15th and 16th, 1864), the regiment was involved in some of the heaviest fighting of the battle. Killed in a minor skirmish near Franklin on the 16th of December was Private John M. Martin of Paris.⁹⁴ After the war ended, the regiment was moved to Decatur, Alabama. In October 1865, the unit was sent to Nashville and mustered out of service.

After returning to Camp Butler, the men were issued their final pay and discharged on November 17, 1865.

Besides those regiments already discussed, many other Illinois units also contained Edgar County natives. Table 6 lists some of these regiments along with the known number of Edgar Countians in each. Four such regiments listed in Table 6 which contained significant numbers of Edgar Countians but, were not mentioned earlier include the 68th, 70th, 135th, and 150th Illinois Infantry regiments.

Both the 68th Illinois Infantry and the 70th Illinois Infantry were three-month regiments recruited strictly for use as state militia.⁹⁵ In the case of the 68th, this regiment was eventually stationed at Alexandria, Virginia as provost guards. Over forty soldiers from Edgar County enrolled in this regiment, serving in several different companies.⁹⁶ The 70th Illinois was not as fortunate as the 68th in that it remained at Camp Butler, Illinois during its entire period of service performing guard duty.⁹⁷ Over seventy Edgar County volunteers enlisted in this regiment, many of whom had served in the 68th Illinois.

The 135th Illinois Infantry Regiment was mustered in as a hundred-day organization in June 1864. During its term of service, this regiment primarily performed railroad guard duty in Missouri. Company C of this regiment contained over sixty men from Edgar County.⁹⁸ In February 1865, the 150th Illinois Infantry Regiment was mustered into service for a period of one year. During this time the unit was stationed in Alabama and Tennessee. Of the eighty or so soldiers enrolled in this unit from Edgar County, most enlisted in Company C.⁹⁹

Some of the other Illinois regiments that contained Edgar Countians were recruited in the counties which surrounded Edgar. For example, both the 123rd Illinois and 130th Illinois Infantry Regiments were recruited in Coles and Clark Counties. Company F of the 30th Illinois Infantry was jointly recruited from Edgar and Clark Counties.¹⁰⁰ The thirty men from Edgar County that enlisted in this unit were all from Elbridge Township.

However, several of the regiments from Illinois that contained Edgar Countians were recruited in counties which were far-removed from Edgar. Two such regiments were the 51st and 53rd Illinois Infantry. Companies A and I of the 51st were both recruited in Cook, Knox and Henry Counties.¹⁰¹ Company H of the 53rd Illinois, was mainly recruited in Marshall County.¹⁰² Another example was that of the 61st Illinois. Men from Edgar County in this unit enrolled in Companies E, H, and K which were primarily recruited in Cass, Lawrence, and Greene Counties respectively.¹⁰³ There are various reasons used to explain why soldiers from one county appear in the ranks of a regiment recruited in a distant county. Many times recruits were simply placed into regiments which were not yet full. Other times, recruits joined with relatives or friends who resided in another county. Whatever their reasons might have been, Edgar Countians enlisted in many units which were recruited in far-off counties.

Of those Edgar Countians serving in other Illinois units, a few were killed in action. Among these were Privates Joseph Fears and Charles H. Thatcher (30th Illinois), from Elbridge, who were killed at the Battle of Atlanta on July 22, 1864.¹⁰⁴ In addition, Privates Troyet York, Ellsha Bailey, and Theodore Linn all of the 51st Illinois were killed at the Battle of Franklin in November 1864.¹⁰⁵ Also, Private William A. Miller of the 123rd Illinois Infantry Regiment was killed in action at the Battle of Perryville, Kentucky.¹⁰⁶ The last known Edgar Countian killed during the war was Recruit Samuel Coolly (Company G, 8th Illinois) of Young America Township who was killed at Fort Blakley, Alabama on April 9, 1865.¹⁰⁷ Ironically, this was the same day in which Confederate General Robert E. Lee surrendered his army to General Ulysses S. Grant at Appomattox Court House, Virginia.

Although the majority of Edgar County volunteers served with Illinois units during the Civil War many also enlisted with out-of-state regiments. Of the total number of Edgar Countians in out-of-state units, the largest number served with Bissell's Engineer Regiment of the West. This unit was organized by Colonel Josiah Bissell at St. Louis, Missouri in August 1861. Since well over one-hundred men from Edgar County served with this unit, a brief regimental history has been included here.

In the summer of 1861 many Edgar Countians volunteered their services in Bissell's Engineer Regiment of the West. Primarily those from Edgar County enlisted in Company B or H. Company B was organized at Paris in July and mustered into service at St. Louis on August 5, 1861 with Captain Charles T. Rowell of Paris commanding.¹⁰⁸ Company H was also organized at Paris and mustered into service on October 31, 1861. Originally, this company did not contain a sufficient number of men and Captain Nathaniel D. Sanford returned to Paris to enlist more recruits. Upon his return, Sanford chose not to muster in with the unit.¹⁰⁹ The majority of Edgar Countians enrolled in Bissell's Regiment were from the townships of Stratton, Elbridge, Paris, and Symmes. Most of the other companies in the regiment were recruited throughout the states of the midwest.¹¹⁰

In March 1862, the unit participated in operations against New Madrid and Island Number Ten. The unit then constructed the New Madrid Canal which allowed Union gunboats a shorter route through the swamplands.¹¹¹ The unit also participated in both the siege and Battle of Corinth, Mississippi (October, 1862), and in the operations against Vicksburg, Mississippi (spring of 1863). In February 1864, Bissell's regiment was consolidated with the 25th Missouri Infantry at Nashville, Tennessee. Upon the consolidation, the combined units were renamed the 1st Missouri Engineer Regiment.¹¹² This regiment also took part in General Sherman's "march to the sea," where it was in charge of the pontoons used for the crossing of rivers. At the conclusion of the war, the regiment participated in the Grand Review held in Washington, D.C. in late May.

Other Missouri units which contained volunteers from Edgar County were the 11th and 26th Missouri Infantry, and the 1st and 5th Missouri Militia. Other out-of-state units containing Edgar Countians, were those recruited in the State of Indiana. However, the number of men from Edgar County in these units was not as great as the number who enlisted with the Missouri units. Of the few Indiana units that contained soldiers from Edgar County, most were organized at Terre Haute, Indiana. Two such regiments were the 71st Indiana Infantry (6th Cavalry) and the 85th Indiana Infantry.¹¹³

Some Edgar Countians also enlisted with units not organized at Terre Haute. The 11th Indiana Cavalry Regiment (126th Infantry), which contained a large number of Edgar Countians, was organized and mustered into service at Indianapolis, Indiana. The 13th Cavalry (131st Infantry) was also organized at Indianapolis.¹¹⁴ Edgar Countians in the former unit were enrolled in

Companies A and F, while those in the latter were enrolled in Company K.¹¹⁵

One of the more interesting outfits which contained natives of Edgar County was the 18th Indiana Battery of Light Artillery. Organized and commanded by Captain Eli Lilly of Greencastle, Indiana, this unit played a prominent role in several battles including the Battle of Chickamauga. This unit was composed of companies which were recruited in counties of west-central Indiana.¹¹⁶ Men from Edgar County in this unit were primarily from the Elbrdige area.

Besides the Edgar Countians who enlisted in units from Illinois, Indiana, and Missouri, a few enrolled with Federal outfits. However, the number of volunteers from Edgar County in these units was minimal. For example, only six Edgar Countians were enrolled in the United States Navy during the Civil War. Contained in the Appendix is a listing of all those known to have served from Edgar County.

Besides military contributions to the Civil War, one Edgar Countian contributed to the war in a most different way. This was William D.T. Travis who became famous after the war for his paintings depicting the conflict. Born in Augusta County, Virginia on July 13, 1839, Travis was living with his family, in rural Edgar County as early as 1840.¹¹⁷ In 1860, Travis was living

In the Dudley vicinity where he listed his occupation, in the census, as painter. Sometime before the war William Travis entered Waveland Collegiate Institute in Indiana to study painting.¹¹⁸

When the war broke out Travis first joined Company E of the 12th Illinois Infantry Regiment in April 1861. On August 1, 1861, when the unit re-enlisted as a three-year outfit, Travis also re-enlisted.¹¹⁹ In September 1861, by special order of U. S. Grant, Travis was transferred, along with his brother Henry, to Company I of the 22nd Illinois listing his residence then as Randolph County.¹²⁰ After serving three years, Travis was mustered out of the service on July 7, 1864 at Springfield, Illinois. During the war Travis was employed by Harper's Weekly and the New York Illustrated News, submitting sketches to both.¹²¹

After the war, Travis moved to Burlington, New Jersey where he continued painting in his home studio. He was then commissioned, by the generals of the Army of the Cumberland, to paint a large mural depicting the history of this army. When finished the mural measured over five-hundred feet long by eight feet high. Comprised of thirty-two panels, the painting was rolled and mounted on two spindles for lecturing purposes. Travis then took the mural on tour with his younger brother James. Lecturing across the midwest, he made the program a huge success. However, as time went on people quit coming to see the show. Travis then retired the mural to the attic in his Burlington farm house. Years later the work was discovered by Mr. C.C. Travis, the artist's nephew and is now on display in the Museum of History and Technology of the Smithsonian Institute.¹²²

CHAPTER III

EDGAR COUNTY ON THE BATTLEFIELD

Perhaps the best representation of Edgar County's military contribution to the war effort was that made on the battlefield. Although it would take many pages to describe the role Edgar Countians played in every battle of the war, one particular engagement has been chosen for inclusion in this paper. This was the Battle of Stones River or Murfreesboro, Tennessee. There are two reasons for choosing this battle as a representation of Edgar County's military contribution on the field of battle. First, there were more Edgar Countians present at this battle than in any other single engagement during the entire war. Secondly, more soldiers from Edgar County were killed in this battle than in any other battle of the Civil War. Thus, the Battle of Stones River is the best example of Edgar County's role on the battlefield during the Civil War.

Present at Stones River were approximately six-hundred soldiers from Edgar County, most of whom were enrolled in the 21st, 25th, 34th, 59th, and 79th Illinois Infantry Regiments. Other units present at Stones River which contained soldiers from Edgar County included the 51st, 123rd, and 125th Illinois Infantry Regiments. Although the Battle of Stones River was a three-day battle (December 31, 1862 - January 2, 1863), only the first day of battle will be discussed in this paper. This was because the majority of Edgar Countians saw very little action during the last two days of battle.

The five Illinois regiments listed above were all part of General Alexander McCook's right wing, which was the main focus of the Confederate Army's attack when the battle began. Located on the extreme right of McCook's wing was General Richard W. Johnson's division which contained the brigades of General Augustus Willich, General Edward Kirk, and Colonel P. Baldwin. Kirk's brigade contained the 34th and 79th Illinois regiments.¹ (See Map 4)

Long before daylight on the 31st, General Willich sent out a patrol to investigate the possibility of an attack at dawn. After the patrol returned with no report of the enemy, Willich was convinced that an attack seemed remote. This attitude was shared by most commanders on the Union right.² However, shortly after six o'clock, the rebels attacked in full force. Although McCook had nearly sixteen thousand troops under his command compared to the ten thousand Confederates, the Union troops were totally unprepared for the attack.³ Most men in Johnson's division were still preparing breakfast when the rebels struck, and were so overcome by fear they simply turned and fled to the rear.⁴

As the men of Willich's and Kirk's brigades ran towards the rear, many were heard shouting the word "Shiloh." It had only been nine months since the rebels had surprised the Union Army at Shiloh in much the same manner. General

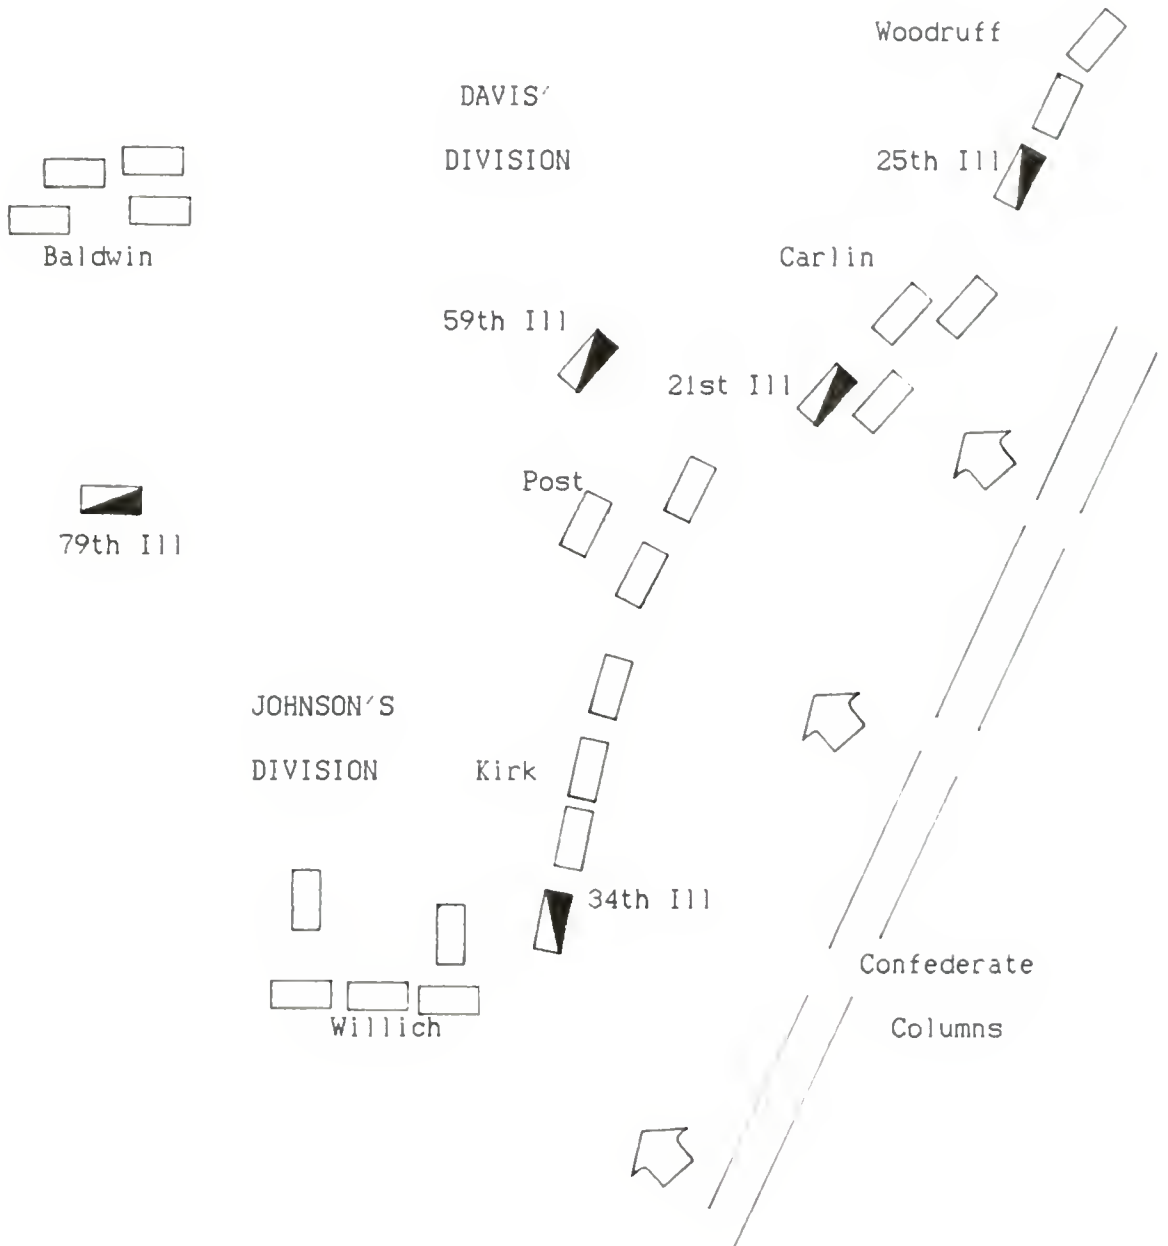

William Hardee's corps, which led the assault at Shiloh, was attacking from the same direction, the south, at the same time in the morning, and with the same result. It was no wonder that "Shiloh" was the word that popped into the minds of the Union soldiers.⁵

Almost as soon as the rebels attacked Kirk's brigade, he ordered the 34th Illinois to fall back and support Captain Warren Edgerton's (1st Ohio Light Artillery) battery, which was situated in the left rear of the 34th. The rebels came pouring in so fast, however, that Edgerton's men hardly had any chance to fire their guns.⁶ As the shattered remnants of Kirk's brigade were being driven back by the onrushing Confederates, General Kirk himself was mortally wounded and the command was passed on to Colonel Joseph Dodge. The struggle for the regimental colors of the 34th was a bloody affair as five color bearers fell in succession before the flag was finally born triumphantly from the field by the Confederates.⁷

As the troops in Willich's and Dodge's (late Kirk's) brigades became intermingled, disorder prevailed and was compounded when the retreating troops ran directly through units stationed in the rear. Such was the case when the 34th crashed into the ranks of its sister unit, the 79th Illinois. The 79th had been guarding the division's supply train the day before and was stationed behind the main Union line.⁸ (See Map 4)

THE UNION RIGHT AT STONES RIVER

Meanwhile, Major Allen Buckner of the 79th rode up and reported to Colonel Dodge that his unit was ready to do what it could. Led by Colonel Sheridan Read of Paris, this unit was relatively new and had yet to see any combat, but it "advanced with the steadiness of a veteran outfit."⁹ Taking a position on the right of the 30th Indiana, the 79th immediately began to pour a heavy fire into the ranks of the rebels. In urging his men into battle Colonel Read was shot and killed instantly. Major Buckner later reported that, "he [Buckner] went to where the colonel had fallen and found that he had been shot directly in the forehead, thus falling at his post and facing the enemy."¹⁰ Colonel Dodge wrote in his battle report that "in his [Read's] death the service has lost a fine officer, a brave soldier, and a true man."¹¹

At this point in the battle, the Confederate troops began to put pressure on General Jefferson C. Davis' division which was located on the left of Johnson. Among those units in Davis' division were the 21st, 25th, and 59th Illinois Infantry Regiments. Of these, the 59th was positioned the farthest right in Colonel Sidney Post's brigade.¹² To the left of Post was General William Carlin's brigade that contained the 21st Illinois commanded by Colonel John W. S. Alexander of Paris.¹³ On Davis' far left was Colonel William Woodruff's brigade which contained the 25th Illinois.¹⁴ (See Map 4)

Having more time to prepare for the Confederate attack, the troops in Davis' division put up a much stiffer resistance than those in Johnson's division. As the rebels plowed into the ranks of the awaiting Union soldiers, the fighting became intense and heavy casualties were inflicted on both sides. Eventually, Davis was forced to withdraw his division to prevent its being outflanked. The retreat by Davis' troops was much more orderly than that undertaken by troops in Johnson's division.

The brunt of the Confederate attack now fell upon the divisions of Generals Phillip Sheridan and George Thomas. Sheridan's men managed to hold off the onrushing Confederates long enough to allow the retreating Union units time to make it to safety. This delay probably prevented a complete rout of the Union Army by the rebels.¹⁵

Another factor which allowed the Union lines time to re-group was that the Confederate attack was beginning to "run out of steam." Many rebels were becoming fatigued and coupled with shortages in ammunition stopped momentarily to replenish their supplies and catch their breaths. Many of the rebel units had become separated as the attack went along creating some confusion among the Confederate ranks.¹⁶ All of these elements allowed the Union lines time to re-group and re-form another line of defense.

Throughout the remainder of the morning, the Union lines fought desperately to prevent defeat. Holding their position astride the Nashville Pike they fought hard as the Confederates made repeated attacks against them. From mid-day until dusk the Union troops held a small rise of ground covered with a clump of cedars. After-battle reports referred to this area as the "Round Forest," but, to those who fought so desperately to defend this position, it became known as "Hell's Half Acre."¹⁷

By mid-afternoon the first day's fighting was tactically over. Confederate General Braxton Bragg had failed in his goal to cut the Union supply line to Nashville. The rebels, who had fought so well almost all day still had not achieved complete victory. For the most part, the role played by Edgar Countians at Stone River was over by mid-day. Since the majority of Edgar Countians were either in Davis' or Johnson's divisions, these units had remained in action, but from behind the Union lines the remainder of the day.

After spending New Year's Day re-grouping and re-positioning their lines, both armies renewed the fighting on January 2nd. This time the action centered on the Union left. Three rebel attacks, led by Confederate General John C. Breckinridge, were unsuccessful in dislodging the Union Army. On January 3rd the rebels began to withdraw from the battlefield and the Union Army, by virtue of remaining in possession of the field, declared itself the victor.

Edgar County's role at the Battle of Stones River can also be measured in the sacrifices its soldiers made on the battlefield. Almost a quarter of all Edgar Countians killed in battle during the entire Civil War, fell at Stones River. Interestingly, only the 21st Illinois and the 79th Illinois Infantry Regiments reported Edgar Countians killed at Stones River. In the 21st Illinois, which reported the most casualties (over three-hundred) of any other Illinois unit, seven men from Edgar County were killed in action.¹⁸ (See Page 64) In addition, Colonel Alexander was wounded. The 79th Illinois reported a total of eleven soldiers from Edgar County killed, including Colonel Read.¹⁹ (See Page 64) In comparing the number of Edgar Countians killed at Stones River with those of each regiment, a better indication of the county's role can be seen. Table 7 lists the number of casualties for the principle Edgar County regiments present at Stones River.

From examining Table 7 it is clear which of those regiments received the greatest number of casualties at Stones River. The 21st Illinois reported fifty-seven soldiers killed at Stones River. Thus, the seven Edgar Countians killed, out of this unit, represent only 14 percent of the unit's total number of men killed. In contrast, the 79th Illinois which reported twenty-four soldiers killed in action contained eleven Edgar Countians who were killed. This represents 46 percent of the unit's total. Thus, almost half of those killed in the 79th Illinois were residents of Edgar County.

Surprisingly, both the 25th and 59th Illinois suffered relatively few casualties. Both reported very few men as missing, probably due to the orderly retreat undertaken by both units. Both the 34th and 79th Illinois fared better than most regiments despite the fierce Confederate attack each withstood. The low number of men killed in the 34th can be attributed to the hasty retreat undertaken by this unit. However, this hasty retreat may also be the reason for the large number of men listed as missing. The large number of men missing from the 79th was probably because of the confusion generated when other units crashed into it. The 21st Illinois suffered its extremely high rate of casualties, probably because of the tough stand it put up in the face of the enemy. Besides those Edgar Countians killed at the Battle of Stones River, many more were wounded. Those killed at the Battle of Stones River from Edgar County are listed below.

George Blace - 21st Illinois (F)
James F. Cassatt - 21st Illinois (F)
Isaac N. Coughonour - 21st Illinois (F)
Benjamin T. G. Fuller - 79th Illinois (H)
George W. Green - 79th Illinois (C)
Richard E. Hamilton - 21st Illinois (F)
Samuel Hickey - 79th Illinois (H)
Benjamin F. Lane - 79th Illinois (A)
Adam Laws - 21st Illinois (F)
William Lewis - 21st Illinois (F)
Henry Loop - 79th Illinois (A)
Sheridan P. Read - 79th Illinois (Colonel)
George H. Rigg - 79th Illinois (C)
Hiram H. Smith - 21st Illinois (F)
Wesley Stricklen - 79th Illinois (C)
Emsley J. Trogden 79th Illinois (D)
George W. Yeakle - 79th Illinois (D)
Peter H. Zink - 79th Illinois (H)

Besides participating at Stones River, Edgar County soldiers were involved in many other battles during the Civil War. Although it would take many pages to describe every engagement, both large and small, that involved Edgar County troops, some of the more famous ones deserve mention.

The first major battle of the Western Theater which involved troops from Edgar County occurred at Fort Donelson, Tennessee in February 1862. Located on the bank of the Cumberland River, this strategic fortress was finally captured by the Union forces, but not without heavy casualties. Among the Union units present at Fort Donelson were the 12th, 29th, and 66th Illinois Infantry (Birge's Sharpshooters). The 12th Illinois was part of John McArthur's first brigade, while Birge's Sharpshooters were assigned to Jacob Lauman's fourth brigade of General Charles Smith's second division. The 29th Illinois was with Richard J. Oglesby's first brigade of General John McClernand's first division.²⁰ At Fort Donelson six Edgar County men were reported killed in action. All were members of the 12th and 29th Illinois Infantry units.²¹ Those killed at Fort Donelson are listed below.

Tobias Bower - 12th Illinois (E)
Peter Geraty - 29th Illinois (H)
Newton M. Johnson - 29th Illinois (H)
Oliver P. Scott - 29th Illinois (H)
William T. Smith - 29th Illinois (H)

In early March 1862, at Pea Ridge, Arkansas Union and Confederate forces again came into contact with each other. Here, two Illinois regiments containing natives of Edgar County were part of General Samuel S. Curtis' army. While the 25th Illinois reported no Edgar County casualties, Edgar Countians John W. Hurst and William H. Smith of the 59th Illinois (Company H) met their deaths.²²

In the bloody battle of Shiloh, Tennessee (April 6th and 7th, 1862), seven more Edgar Countians lost their lives. Fighting here were the 12th, 29th, 34th, and 66th Illinois Infantry. Three of these outfits (12th, 29th, and 66th) were members of the Union Army of the Tennessee, while the 34th Illinois was part of the Union Army of the Ohio. Both the 12th and 66th Illinois were brigaded together in John McArthur's second brigade of General W.H.L. Wallace's second division. The 29th Illinois was part of Julius Raith's third brigade of General John McClernand's first division. The 34th Illinois was assigned to Edward N. Kirk's fifth brigade of General Alexander McCook's second division.²³ Of those Edgar Countians killed at Shiloh, all were members of the 12th, 29th, and 34th Illinois Infantry.²⁴ Below are listed those Edgar Countians killed at Shiloh.

Charles Buckingham - 29th Illinois (H)
Samuel J. Lamb - 34th Illinois (K)
Jason B. Sprague - 29th Illinois (H)
Jacob Stoneburner - 34th Illinois (K)
James F. Stout - 12th Illinois (E)
Tillman Thornton - 29th Illinois (H)

In June 1863, Union forces attacked the Confederate held mountain pass at Liberty Gap, Tennessee. In the attacking force were two Illinois regiments which contained Edgar Countians. The 34th and 79th, were brigaded together in Joseph Dodge's second brigade of General Richard Johnson's second division.²⁵ When the attack was over, and the Union army had taken the pass, it was the 79th Illinois which reported the most casualties of all those units participating. Already depleted from its tough two-day stand at Stones River, the unit suffered an additional forty-seven casualties here including five who were killed.²⁶ Four of the five killed were from Edgar County.²⁷ Those killed are listed below.

William J. Henson - 79th Illinois (C)
Commodore P. Lake - 79th Illinois (A)
James L. Mercer - 79th Illinois (C)
John H. Patton - 79th Illinois (C)

Perhaps the bloodiest battle of the entire Western Theater of the the war occurred at Chickamauga, Georgia in September 1863. Edgar County soldiers also participated in this important battle, and several more were killed. Among the units at Chickamauga were the 21st, 25th, and 79th Illinois Infantry Regiments. Both the 21st and 25th were assigned to the second (William P. Carlin's) and third (Hans C. Heg's) brigades, respectively, of General Jefferson C. Davis' first division. The 79th meanwhile, was part of Joseph Dodge's second brigade of General Richard Johnson's second division.²⁸ Those Edgar Countians killed at Chickamuaga were all members of the above mentioned reglments and are listed below.²⁹

John W.S. Alexander - 21st Illinois (Colonel)
Stephen D. Jones - 21st Illinois (F)
Oliver Keyser - 21st Illinois (F)
William Keyser - 21st Illinois (F)
George W. Staats - 25th Illinois (A)
Henry C. Thomas - 79th Illinois (C)

One of the last major battles fought in the western theater of the war occurred at Franklin, Tennessee in November 1864. Present for this battle were four regiments containing soldiers from Edgar County. In Isaac M. Kirby's first brigade of General Nathan Kimball's first division was the 21st Illinois Infantry Regiment. The 51st and 79th Illinois were both part of Joseph Conrad's third brigade of

General George D. Wagner's second division. Last was the 59th Illinois which was assigned to P. Sidney Post's second brigade of General Thomas J. Wood's third division.³⁰

Those Edgar Countians killed at Franklin were members of the 51st and 79th Illinois Regiments and are listed below.³¹

Elisha Balley - 51st Illinois (A)
James M. Burket - 79th Illinois (D)
Theodore Linn - 51st Illinois (A)
Troyet York - 51st Illinois (A)

Besides the above mentioned battles, Edgar Countians also participated in such famous battles as Corinth, Iuka, Kenesaw Mountain, Nashville, Atlanta, Resaca, Perryville, and Chattanooga. In addition, Edgar County volunteers were involved in numerous smaller battles and skirmishes throughout the war. Besides participating, many also were killed fighting in some of these battles and skirmishes. Below are listed these individuals along with their unit and the battle or skirmish in which they were killed.

John W. Athon - 12th IL (E) - Atlanta
John Buntain - 21 IL (F) - Iuka
Bernard Carr - 79 IL (C) - Kenesaw Mt.
Samuel Coolly - 8 IL (G) - Ft. Blakely
John S. Evans - 12 IL (E) - Corinth
Joseph Fears - 30 IL (F) - Atlanta
John Fregon - 79 IL (A) - Resaca
Henry B. Hall - 12 IL (E) - Allatoona Pass
Pleasant Hendricks - 79 IL (H) - Resaca
George W. Ingram - 59 IL (K) - Columbia, TN
John H. Lorimer - 66 IL (G) - Kenesaw Mt.
John M. Martin - 7 IL Cav (A) - skirmish
Isaac J. McCormick - 12 IL (E) - Corinth
William A. Miller - 123 IL (F) - Perryville
Elijah Millam jr. - 21 IL (F) - Gay's Gap
Josiah Mishler - 64 IL (H) - Kenesaw Mt.
Albert G. Roberts - 12 IL (E) - Corinth
William H. Steepleton - 34 IL (K) - Jonesboro

John H. Stoner - 64 IL (H) - Atlanta
Charles H. Thatcher - 30 IL (F) - Atlanta
Amanda G. Tweedy - 7 IL Cav (A) - skirmish
Nathan O. Wilber - 64 IL (H) - Kenesaw Mt.
Asa Williams - 79 IL (H) - Missionary Ridge
John M. York - 66 IL (E) - Rome Crossroads

In all, seventy Edgar County soldiers were killed in action during the Civil War. This is only 3 percent of the county's total credit of 2,312 men. For the entire state, 9,894 men were killed or mortally wounded which is approximately 4.3 percent of the state's total credit.³² A few Edgar Countians killed during the war were later buried within the county. However, most were buried in cemeteries located near where they were killed. Sometimes a family's wealth and influence determined whether or not their loved ones were returned home for re-burial. For example, both Colonels Read and Alexander are buried in Edgar Cemetery in Paris. No doubt the families of these two men could afford to have their bodies returned to Paris for burial. However, a few other Edgar County soldiers killed during the war are buried within the county.

In addition to those Edgar Countians who were killed in action during the war, many more died of wounds or disease. Some even died accidentally as a result of drownings or other causes. Two such cases were that of Farrier Henry Falth (7th Illinois Cavalry - A) who was accidentally killed by a ball from Union artillery, and Private William F. O'Neal (29th Illinois - H) who was killed when a Federal magazine exploded accidentally at Mobile, Alabama.³³ However, it is hard to determine how many men actually died from each cause because the Illinois Adjutant General's Report sometimes did not specify the exact cause of death.

A total of 252 soldiers from Edgar County died during the war from all causes. This is almost 11 percent of the county's total credit figure of 2,312. The large number of Edgar Countians who died during the war is fitting testimony to the fact that disease took more lives during the Civil War than did the battlefield. Bell Wiley in his The Life of Billy Yank, quotes the research of the Surgeon General of the U.S. Army by writing that, "in the Federal forces four persons died of sickness for every one killed . . . deaths from disease were twice those resulting from all other known causes."³⁴ Of the 252 Edgar Countians who died during the war, nineteen died as prisoners of war mainly at the infamous Andersonville Prison in Georgia. Other Confederate prisons in which Edgar County soldiers died at included Libby Prison in Richmond, Virginia and the prison at Danville, Virginia.

In summary, 324 Edgar Countians sacrificed their lives during the Civil War. This includes those who were killed in action, died of disease or other causes, or died as prisoners of war. This figure represents 14 percent of the county's total credit, which is slightly lower than the state's average of just over 16.5 percent.³⁵

An interesting story involving one Edgar County casualty centers on Private John Schafer of Paris. The story of Schafer is unique in that he was reported as missing in action at the Battle of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, making him the only known Edgar County participant and casualty of this famous battle. Private Schafer was forty years old when he enlisted with Company D of the 82nd Illinois in July 1862. Born in Bavaria, Germany, Schafer was a married farmer when he enlisted in the service.³⁶

This unit was primarily recruited in the Cook County area and was comprised almost entirely of Germans.³⁷ Organized by Colonel Frederick Hecker, the 82nd Illinois was commonly referred to as the "Second Hecker Regiment."³⁸ Unlike most Illinois units, the 82nd was sent first to the Eastern Theater of the war. Here it participated in many engagements including Chancellorsville, Virginia and Gettysburg. Later in the war, this unit was transferred to the Western Theater where it participated in such battles as Chickamauga and Atlanta. On the first day of battle at Gettysburg (July 1), the 82nd was positioned northwest of the city near the Theological Seminary. When the Confederates attacked, the 82nd Illinois was one of many units which was forced to retreat through the city of Gettysburg. In an attempt to save their men from a devastating enemy fire, division commanders marched men diagonally across the town. The result was confusion that soon degenerated into panic.³⁹

Throughout the second and third days of the battle, the 82nd Illinois occupied a position on Cemetery Hill where they remained, for the most part, until the battle was over on July 3rd. In all likelihood, Private Schafer was reported as missing on the first day of battle. It is not known whatever became of John Schafer. Perhaps he was taken prisoner or just disappeared in the panic and confusion during the Union retreat through the streets of Gettysburg. Whatever happened, it is known that Private Schafer was a long way from his home that fateful July day in Pennsylvania.

CHAPTER IV

EFFECTS OF THE WAR ON EDGAR COUNTY

The effect that the Civil War had upon Edgar County can be measured in several ways, the most notable being an increase in violence which can be attributed to locally strong Copperhead activity. This Copperhead activity was the indirect result of political tension which existed in the county. Although anti-war feelings in Edgar County did not come to a boil until late in the war, the factors which created this tension had been brewing for several years.

To understand why Copperhead activity even existed in Edgar County one must first examine the early immigration patterns of the county. Edgar County had first been settled by immigrants from Kentucky and Tennessee who were openly sympathetic with the South and the institution of slavery. Later groups of immigrants from the Northern states of Indiana and Ohio settled in Edgar County. As a result of this mixing of immigrant groups an animosity began to grow. As the Civil War dragged on this animosity grew until it finally erupted in violence.¹

These two groups of immigrants also brought with them different political beliefs. Politically, Edgar County had voted Democratic as far back as the 1836 Presidential Election. Only in 1840 and again in 1848, did the voters of Edgar County favor the Whig Party candidate, and then only by sixty-three and thirteen votes respectively. However, the Democratic victories of 1836, 1844, and 1852 were by the slimmest of margins, with all being decided by fewer than three-hundred votes in Edgar County.²

Perhaps the reason for this strong showing offered the Democrats can be found in how the earlier generations had voted in the county. The large number of Southern immigrants who had settled in the county generally voted Democratic. As Northern immigrants began to settle in the county, the county's political scene also began to shift. Thus, by 1860, many second generation voters were also turning to the Democrats much like their fathers had done. However, the increasing numbers of Republican voters guaranteed neither party a "foothold" in Edgar County.

Since Abraham Lincoln and Stephen Douglas were the same candidates who had ran for the Illinois Senate seat in 1858, an examination of this election may explain why Edgar County voted as it did in 1860. In 1858, after a much celebrated campaign which included seven joint debates, Stephen Douglas narrowly defeated Abraham Lincoln for the senate seat. Both candidates had criss-crossed the state giving speeches supporting their party's platform. In fact, both had made visits to Edgar County during this campaign but, under very different circumstances.

Stephen A. Douglas was scheduled to speak in Paris on July 30, 1858. However, several travel delays prevented him from arriving until six o'clock in the morning on the 31st.

Even this delay did not dampen the crowd's spirit as many well wishers turned out for Douglas' speech.³

Abraham Lincoln's visit to Edgar County on September 8, 1858, was a much different affair. According to one newspaper account, "the crowd was larger by five hundred than that which came together last month to make the Douglas 'demonstration.'"⁴ Obviously a Republican sheet, the paper went on to write that "the doings yesterday eclipsed the 'Dimmeocratic'[sic] performance in numbers, enthusiasm, and everything else."⁵ If one could judge the election based only on these accounts, Lincoln obviously should have carried the county. However, this was not the case as Douglas carried Edgar County on his way to claiming the Senate seat.⁶

Perhaps the 1858 Senatorial race was an indication of how evenly divided the county was prior to the Civil War. In the 1860 election Douglas out-pollled Lincoln in the county by only 196 votes. Douglas' total of 1,923 votes out of 3,727 votes cast gave him a slight majority of 51.6 percent.⁷ Lincoln received 1,727 votes for 46.3 percent.⁸ These percentages were almost a reversal of those for both candidates at the state level. Lincoln received 172,171 votes statewide or 50.7 percent, while Douglas gained 160,205 votes for 47.2 percent of the vote.⁹ Interestingly, John Bell the Constitutional Union Party candidate and John

C. Breckinridge, the Southern Democratic candidate both received votes in Edgar County. Bell picked up eleven votes to Breckinridge's sixty-six.¹⁰ Both of these candidates received 4,913 and 2,402 votes respectively statewide.¹¹

By examining the vote totals for the counties surrounding Edgar, it is clear that the voters in Edgar County were not alone in voting for Douglas in 1860. Both Cumberland and Clark Counties also voted in favor of Douglas by 411 and 280 votes respectively.¹² In Coles County, where some of Lincoln's relatives lived, the Republican candidate out-pollled his opponent by only twenty-eight votes.¹³ In Vermilion County the margin of victory for Lincoln was the largest of any east-central Illinois county. Here Lincoln received over six-hundred more votes than Douglas.¹⁴ Newly created Douglas County also voted Lincoln the winner by over two-hundred votes.¹⁵

In the 1860 campaign both political parties had their own groups of supporters across the country and in Edgar County. The Democrats (Northern faction) were commonly known as the "Douglas Rangers." Wearing red shirts and matching caps, these supporters of Douglas led their party's rallies throughout the county. Republicans, meanwhile, formed a group known as the "Wide Awake Club." These "Wide Awakes," as they were commonly referred to, also wore a rude uniform of oil cloth and carried torches at night rallies.¹⁶

The local press also played an important role in the political campaign of 1860. Edgar County was served by only two newspapers during the Civil War years. The Paris Prairie Beacon was a Whig/Republican sheet started in 1848, by Jacob Harding. Published at Paris, this paper merged with the Valley Blade to become the Prairie Beacon and Valley Blade in 1864.¹⁷ The other local newspaper was the Paris Democratic Standard, also known as the Paris Times. Started in 1860, this Democratic paper was only published during the war years. It was then sold and renamed the Wabash Valley Times in 1865.¹⁸ Known for its particularly strong Copperhead slant, the Times was repeatedly the target of local Union sympathizers. During the summer of 1862, the publishing of this paper was temporarily suspended when the editor and publisher were arrested for fear that remarks published in the paper might encourage local Copperhead activities.¹⁹ In early 1864, at the height of strong Copperhead activities in the area, it was the office of the Times which came under threat of attack by local Union soldiers.²⁰

Not only did Edgar Countians favor Stephen Douglas in 1860, but also chose Democratic candidates for state and local offices as well. In the race for governor, Democrat James G. Allen carried the county by some 227 votes over Republican Richard Yates.²¹ In the races for congressional representatives, the Democratic margins of victory were equally as strong. In the Congressional Representative race

Republican James F. Cunningham lost in the county to Democrat James C. Robinson by 189 votes.²² Two longtime Edgar County natives, William P. Dole (R) and Napoleon B. Stage (D) squared off in the race for State Representative with the Democrat Stage winning in Edgar County by 132 votes.²³

Perhaps the most interesting local race in 1860, was for Sheriff of Edgar County where Michael E. O'Hair (D) won over William B. Bailey (R) by a mere thirty-nine votes.²⁴ Two years later Michael's son, William S. O'Hair (D), was elected sheriff of Edgar County.²⁵ Ironically, William's cousin (John H. O'Hair) was elected sheriff of Coles County at the same time. Both John and William would play major roles in local Copperhead activities.²⁶

Although the county favored the Democrats in 1860, this did not prevent President Lincoln from choosing three Edgar Countians to serve in his administration. William P. Dole was selected to serve as Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Judge James Steele, a prominent Paris attorney, was chosen to serve as Dole's chief clerk. George W. Rives, another Paris native, was appointed Assessor of Internal Revenue.²⁷

Despite Edgar County's strong military contribution to the war effort, it remained, for the most part, a Democratic county. In the 1862 election for Congressman-at-large, the county favored Democrat James G. Allen by almost 65 percent of the vote.²⁸ However, most of central Illinois also voted in favor of Allen. Surprisingly, Edgar County voted Democratic again in the 1864 Presidential Election. This time Democratic candidate George McClellan out-pollled President Lincoln by 1,858 to 1,683 votes in Edgar County.²⁹

By 1868, the county was still voting Democratic as Presidential Candidate Horatio P. Seymour won the county by a 2,320 to 2,298 count over Republican war-hero Ulysses S. Grant.³⁰ It was not until the 1872 Presidential Election that Edgar County voted in favor of someone other than a Democrat for the first time since 1848.³¹

From examining the above political events, it is clear that Edgar County was almost evenly split between the Democrats and Republicans in 1860. However, the animosity between the two groups of immigrants and the close margins of Democratic victories created political tensions which eventually led to violence as the war progressed. Now that the political scene in Edgar County has been reviewed, a look at the Copperhead activity which plagued the county can be examined in more understandable terms.

In the North, during the Civil War, those Democrats who refused to cooperate with President Lincoln's administration were commonly known as Peace Democrats, Butternuts, or Copperheads.³² These Peace Democrats, or Copperheads as they were more commonly called, followed a course that was condemned by their fellow citizens as being treasonable. They were actively opposed to such measures as the military draft and the imposition of military rule. These they felt were unconstitutional. Most, however, were sincere in their belief that the war was a mistake and to pursue it further would only ruin the country. Their slogan was "The Constitution as it is and the Union as it was."³³ Although many Copperheads were Confederate sympathizers, many still had strong ties with the Union. By hating the administration and its policies, and at the same time living in the Union, many Copperheads were put in a difficult position.³⁴

In 1862, the more militant of the Copperheads formed an organization known as the Knights of the Golden Circle. Later this group changed its name to The Order of American Knights, and finally to the Sons of Liberty.³⁵ Led by the fiery Clement L. Vallandigham of Ohio, the Knights were started in Indiana and were based on a pre-war proslavery group prominent in the border states. By 1862, local chapters of this group had spread across the midwestern states of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois.³⁶ To combat the anti-war propaganda of the Knights, Unionists organized a secret society of their own known as the Union League. The first Illinois meeting of this society was held at Pekin in June 1862.³⁷

As the Civil War progressed, organized retaliation by Copperhead groups became extremely serious. Gangs of bushwackers from Missouri, horse thieves, and deserters from both armies helped to swell the ranks of the Copperhead groups in central and southern Illinois.³⁸ Armed resistance on the part of the Copperheads became a constant fear for those Union men in the central part of Illinois. An increase in demand for guns, revolvers, and ammunition was especially noticed by storekeepers, whose supplies were being drained by local Copperheads.³⁹

In east-central Illinois both Edgar and Coles Counties were the seats of especial disturbances. Most Copperheads in Edgar County were members of the Knights of the Golden Circle. As early as June, 1863, groups of Copperheads in Coles County were reportedly meeting for the sole purpose of engaging in military drill. Local tradition has it that they were actually stock-piling arms in anticipation of something bigger to come.⁴⁰

The Copperhead "districts" of Coles County were primarily located in the northern and eastern portions of the county. In particular, Seven Hickory Township was the scene of much activity.⁴¹ Edgar County's Copperhead activities were somewhat more widespread. Embarrass Township seemed to be one "hotbed" of local Copperhead activity according to the Paris Prairie Beacon which reported in June 1863, that "the flag still floats unmolested . . . though the Knights still hold meetings in this [Embarrass] township."⁴² However, Symmes Township, which was the home of prominent Copperhead families such as the O'Hairs, Hanks, Wells and Swangos, also seemed to be the location of strong Copperhead sentiment.⁴³

By late 1863, localized Copperhead activity in and around Coles and Edgar Counties had grown to serious proportions. In early February 1864, the growing agitation erupted into violence for the first time as Copperheads and furloughed soldiers clashed in Mattoon, Illinois in what is known as the "Mattoon incident." The editor of the Paris Times blamed the incident on Copperheads belonging to a subversive secret society.⁴⁴

The violent activities were not just limited to Coles County as Milton York of Paris shot and seriously wounded a local Copperhead named Cooper in downtown Paris on February 16. According to witnesses, York, whose father Shubal York was later killed in the Charleston, Illinois riot, acted in self-defense.⁴⁵ Many believe that this incident was responsible for the death of the elder York in Charleston. The Yorks were well-known Republican Abolitionists, and were generally hated by the local Copperheads.⁴⁶

As in most areas of the midwest, the Copperheads in Edgar County continuously threatened soldiers who were home on leave. The Illinois State Journal of Springfield reported in early March 1864, that Edgar County's Copperheads, "have made numerous threats against the soldiers of veteran regiments and have vowed to 'clean them out' . . . these threats are known to the soldiers and they are on their guard."47

On the 22nd of February a more serious event occurred in Paris between soldiers of the 12th and 66th Illinois Infantry regiments and local Copperheads. Supposedly, the Copperheads, led by Amos Green, had been stock-piling arms in a barn in Paris. Green, who was editor and publisher of the Paris Times, a local Copperhead sheet, had been suspected of storing arms in the paper's office as well.⁴⁸ According to local accounts, a group of about twenty-five to thirty Copperheads arrived in town to take possession of the arms. When Union soldiers learned of this, they proceeded immediately to seize the "arsenal."⁴⁹

Upon approaching the barn the soldiers were met by several Copperheads who in turn fired at them. Returning the fire, the soldiers wounded one Copperhead, later identified as Alfred Kennedy.⁵⁰ At this time, Mark Boatman (12th Illinois) of Paris approached the wounded Copperhead who begged him not to shoot. Lowering his pistol, Kennedy shot Boatman in the shoulder and also succeeded in wounding Lemuel Trowbridge (66th Illinois) before he was cut down by a volley from the other soldiers.⁵¹

The Illinois State Journal reported a few days later that "when the shooting had started seven Copperheads (all well known men), rode out of Amos Green's barn and headed for the country."⁵² Actually, the barn was owned by the

Tremont House Hotel of Paris.⁵³ Three days later the same paper reported that the Copperheads "were armed and had threatened to attack the town. . . [and] that three to four citizens have been taken prisoner by Green's men."⁵⁴

After a second incident had occurred in Paris, Illinois Governor Richard Yates telegraphed Secretary of War Edwin Stanton for help in quelling the disturbance. In his plea for assistance, Yates wrote, "that they [Copperheads and soldiers] have had two battles, several killed."⁵⁵ Through a series of orders and messages, General Samuel P. Heintzelman, commander of the Union Army's Department of the Ohio, was dispatched to Paris from Columbus, Ohio. In addition, two companies of Invalid Corps from Chicago were also ordered to Paris.⁵⁶

Upon his arrival in Paris, Heintzelman telegraphed General Henry Halleck that he "found the town perfectly quiet; the account being greatly exaggerated. No one has been killed and but three wounded."⁵⁷ Although Heintzelman failed to report that one Copperhead had, in fact, been killed, he did indicate that Governor Yates' account had been exaggerated. Immediately after the incident, "Republican newspaper editors blamed the Edgar County 'riots' on members of a Copperhead secret society, calling the incident the 'Edgar County Insurrection.'"⁵⁸

A few days after the incident, local papers began circulating stories that Edgar County Sheriff William S.

O'Hair was involved in the affair. Supposedly, "the soldiers had threatened to wreck the office of the Times, but that editor Green apologized for his anti-Republican remarks." According to local accounts, Sheriff William O'Hair then formed a "posse comitatus," to seek revenge on the soldiers and it was this group which attacked the soldiers.⁵⁹

Perhaps the violence in Edgar County was an indication of something more serious to come. On Monday March 28, 1864, in Charleston, soldiers and Copperheads clashed in what is known as the Charleston riot. Unlike the draft riots which were occurring across the country, the Charleston affair was not a draft riot.⁶⁰ Since the story of the riot has been told and re-told over the years, only a brief summary of it will be presented here. Even though the riot took place in neighboring Coles County, many of the riot's participants were residents of Edgar County.

Copperheads in and around Charleston decided to journey into town on the 28th, in hopes of confronting Union soldiers on leave. Many soldiers of the 54th Illinois Infantry Regiment from the counties of Coles and Edgar were in Charleston on the 28th awaiting to reassemble at Mattoon, Illinois. Since the 28th was also court day, many civilians were in town as well.⁶¹

During the time that the soldiers were on furlough, Coles County Sheriff John H. O'Hair (29), a former resident of Edgar County, had stayed out of town to avoid any trouble. However, O'Hair felt that his presence on court day was required and he left his father's farm on Big Creek in southern Edgar County (Symmes Township) where he had been staying.⁶² He was accompanied by two of his deputies, Elsberry "Berry" Hanks (his cousin) and Jesse Swango, both of Edgar County. Later reports indicated that "Berry" Hanks was a Southern participant of the riot.⁶³ Anticipating trouble, O'Hair felt it necessary to bring these two men along. With them were the sheriff's brothers, James and Henderson O'Hair, along with John and William Frazier. All were well-known Copperheads of Coles and Edgar Counties.⁶⁴

Also present in Charleston on the 28th were eight men from Edgar County who were known to be ardent Peace Democrats. Supposedly, these eight were traveling west to escape the draft and mine gold. Since they were armed, these men played a significant role in the outcome of the riot. Among the eight were Nelson and Frank Wells, Ogden and Nelson O'Hair, and Green Hanks. All were relatives of John O'Hair and lived near the O'Hair family homestead in southern Edgar County.⁶⁵

By mid-afternoon the scene around the Charleston courthouse was buzzing with anticipation that something big was about to happen. As more Copperheads and soldiers came into town, tempers became heated as many on both sides had been drinking. Early in the afternoon the Democrats around the square were told to seek safety in the confines of the courthouse until the soldiers had left town.⁶⁶

Reports differ as to how the "riot" started. Some reports say the soldiers provoked the fight, but no one is certain. Supposedly, Nelson Wells (23) and a soldier of the 54th Illinois, Oliver Sallee, exchanged words before both shot at and killed the other. Republican accounts say that Wells was the aggressor, while Democratic reports make Wells an innocent victim of an unprovoked attack.⁶⁷ According to the Coles County Circuit Court Affidavits, no one is certain who shot whom during the fight. James D. Ellington testified that "he observed Henderson O'Hair shoot Major York."⁶⁸ One witness, Samuel Goodrich, whose own son (James Goodrich) was killed, said that "his dying son told him that Nelson Wells shot him first before Sheriff O'Hair shot him twice more".⁶⁹

Almost immediately after the Wells-Sallee incident, shooting became widespread and before it was over nine people were dead and another twelve wounded. Among those killed were six soldiers, including Major Shubal York of Paris. Of the three civilians killed, two were known to be Copperheads. Both Nelson Wells of Edgar County and John Cooper of Salisbury, Illinois were shot and killed by soldiers of the 54th. John Jenkins, a civilian of Charleston, was accidentally killed by a stray bullet intended for one of the Copperheads.⁷⁰ A list of those killed in the riot follows.

Shubal York; Paris, soldier-54th Illinois
Alfred Swim; Casey, soldier-54th Illinois
James Goodrich; Charleston, soldier-54th Illinois
Oliver Sallee; Charleston, soldier-54th Illinois
John Neer; Martinsville, soldier-54th Illinois
William G. Hart; Charleston, soldier-62nd Illinois
Nelson Wells; Edgar County, Copperhead
John Cooper; Sallsbury, Copperhead
John Jenkins; Charleston, civilian

As soon as the shooting started, Sheriff O'Hair rushed from the courthouse and joined his fellow Copperheads on the streets of Charleston. On his way out of the courthouse, O'Hair was almost gunned down by Major York, but was saved when York fell dead.⁷¹ At the height of the shooting someone on the street reported seeing Evaline O'Hair (John's wife) running towards the courthouse. Realizing that she was pregnant, the bystander warned her not to go up there, that "they are having trouble." Mrs. O'Hair's reply was "I know it and John's in it." The same witness noticed that she was carrying something in her apron. Berry Hanks later said that the "something" was powder and caps.⁷²

Almost as soon as the riot started, it was over. The Copperheads now under the leadership of John O'Hair boarded horses and wagons and left town in an easterly direction. Soldiers immediately assembled under the command of Captain Greenville Mitchell of the 54th Illinois (himself wounded in the riot) and set out in pursuit of the rioters. Throughout the evening and night the soldiers pursued the Copperheads, capturing some fifty of them. However, despite the combined efforts of citizens and soldiers O'Hair and the other

co-leaders escaped capture.⁷³

As with the riot itself, reports differ as to the whereabouts of O'Hair and the others after the fight. In testimony given in the Coles County Circuit Court just days after the riot, William Clapp, who joined the group on the night of the 28th, said that most of the rioters had first assembled at Harrington's Blacksmith Shop in northeastern Coles County. Clapp and the others then rode to Donica's Point, arriving at sunrise on the 29th. According to Clapp's testimony, John O'Hair had departed the party around 11:00 P.M. on the 28th and thus, was not with the group when it arrived at Donica's Point. Clapp's group then journeyed south into Clark County staying south of Martinsville until Friday (April 1).⁷⁴

Sheriff O'Hair and Elsberry Hanks supposedly journeyed eastward into Edgar County where they spent the night at the farm of Adin Baber before traveling on to the home of the sheriff's father (John O'Hair). Berry later told his sister, Mary Ellen Baber, that the two spent a couple of nights hiding in a ravine in back of Fred McGill's place in southern Edgar County. They were then taken to Bud Redmon's near the Paris-Grandview Road by Jonathan Ogden, their cousin.⁷⁵ While searching for the Copperheads, local "home guards" looted the rural homes of both Sheriff O'Hair and his father.⁷⁶

Traveling north into Vermillion County O'Hair and Hanks boarded a train (at Fairmount) full of Union soldiers by accident. Calmly walking the length of the car, the two exited out the back door and waited for a more hospitable ride.⁷⁷ Eventually, O'Hair and Hanks made it to Canada where they stayed for some time before returning to Illinois toward the end of the war. Both men were never prosecuted for their part in the riot.⁷⁸

As for those Copperheads captured, twenty-one were released after preliminary questioning. The remaining twenty-nine were sent to Camp Yates (Springfield) by order of Assistant Provost Marshal General James Oakes. After further questioning at Camp Yates, another thirteen were released. The remaining fifteen (one had died while in custody at Springfield) were then transferred to federal custody at Fort Delaware, Delaware. Here they were to await trial by a military court.⁷⁹

In November 1864, by order of the President himself, these prisoners were released and returned to east-central Illinois. Many of the Copperheads who had participated in the riot were distant relatives of President Lincoln, and that this played a major role in his releasing them despite objections from many in his cabinet.⁸⁰ The president's cousin (Dennis Hanks) was also instrumental in gaining the pardon for these men as he journeyed to Washington personally to talk to the President.⁸¹ While being held at Fort Delaware, two of the prisoners were returned to Coles County where they stood trial for murder, but lack of any substantial evidence prevented their being prosecuted.

After the Charleston "affair", Edgar County and the rest of east-central Illinois was virtually untouched by any further Copperhead activity. It could have been that the magnitude of the violence in downtown Charleston was too much for the local agitators. Another factor could have been that the absence of local leaders, such as O'Hair, caused the movement to die off.

Historians who have studied the Copperhead movement have developed several theories as to why "Copperheadism" even existed at all. Frank L. Klement writes in his The Copperheads in the Middlewest that, "the Republican constructed myths about Copperhead secret societies served their purposes well. It was a political apparition which appeared on the eve of elections."⁸² Whether or not, some of the Copperhead activities in Coles and Edgar Counties were fabricated as Klement suggests remains to be proven. What is known, however, is that violence did result in these two counties as an indirect result of the animosity between Copperheads and loyal Union citizens.

Another aspect of the war which affected Edgar County was that of desertion. In units from Illinois, the total number of deserters was somewhere around 13,046.⁸³ Although no exact figure is known, historians are reasonably sure that at least this many Illinois soldiers deserted the army. After the surrender of Confederate General Robert E. Lee's Army large numbers of Union soldiers began to desert the army. Although many of those who deserted left the service as the war was winding down, some simply became dis-illusioned with the war and left earlier than they should have.

Only fifty-three men from Edgar County are known to have deserted the service during the entire war.⁸⁴ Of this number, over half deserted during the years 1864 and 1865. It has been suggested that the Copperhead activity in the North contributed to the high rate of desertion towards the end of the war. In his Era of the Civil War, Arthur Cole writes that, "desertions were, indeed, the result of either advice and aid of relatives and friends, or of any anti-war agency."⁸⁵ Although Cole's statement may be partly true, there is no definite proof that Copperheads directly contributed to desertions.

The fifty-three deserters from Edgar County represent less than 2 percent of the county's total credit of 2,312 men. In the state, the 13,000 or so deserters represented about 5 percent of the total force (259,092)⁸⁶ credited to the state. Therefore, Edgar County had a smaller desertion rate than the state as a whole.

The draft was still another aspect of the war which affected Edgar County. When the Civil War began in 1861, men in the North rushed to enlistment centers to sign up for military service. However, by 1862 the glamour of enlisting was gone. The appearance that the war was going to be a long one with mounting casualty lists, hardship, and deprivation, caused volunteering to "fall-off" rapidly. Therefore, the government proposed that a draft would have to be used to make up the deficiencies of manpower.⁸⁷

There were four drafts held in the North during the Civil War. The first of these was held in the summer of 1863. In 1864, two more drafts were needed, one in the spring and one in the fall. The last draft was conducted during the spring of 1865.⁸⁸

When the government proposed holding a draft they also set up the system by which it would be conducted. Those overseeing the drafting and subsequent enlistment of men were called the draft board.⁸⁹ Sometimes referred to as the enrollment board, this panel consisted of three individuals. The president of the draft board was also the district provost marshal, with the other two members being the commissioner and the surgeon. The surgeon was also responsible for conducting the medical examination, and thus, was to be a practicing physician.⁹⁰

Before a draft could be held the board was to solicit the district to complete an enrollment list. The districts were usually divided into subdistricts to make this task easier to complete. In cities wards served as the basis for subdistricts while the township was usually used in rural areas.⁹¹

When the enrollment list was made, the names of those eligible were prepared for the draft. Usually, the actual drawing of the names was held in a public place where all could observe the procedure. Once a man's name was called a notice was sent informing him that he had been selected for military service. The draftee then had a certain time in which to arrive at the enlistment center for processing and examination purposes. The recruit was then allowed a few days furlough in order to clear up any personal business before being sent into the field.⁹²

Sometimes draft boards were asked to draft more men than were needed. This was because many draftees failed to pass the physical examination or were exempt for some reason. Section Twelve of the Enrollment Act provided that each board should draft 50 percent more men than was needed. Many times this even proved to be inadequate. In July 1864, an amendment was passed which doubled the 50 percent figure to 100 percent. Consequently, twice as many names were drawn as actually needed. As it turned out though, they were usually needed.⁹³

Whether or not a draft was held in a particular state or congressional district depended largely on the state's enrollment credit up to that time. If a state or district was behind in its quota, then the draft was implemented to make up the difference. In Illinois, where the lack of volunteering did not become a problem until 1864, there was no draft needed until the fall of that year.⁹⁴

Although a draft was held in Illinois' Seventh Congressional District in the fall of 1864, the number of men drafted from Edgar County is unknown. In July 1864, the county was 150 men behind in its established quota of 1,962.⁹⁵ Chances are then at least this many men (150) were drafted into the service during the fall draft of 1864. In the subsequent draft held in the spring of 1865, the number of Edgar Countians is known. Table 8 lists the number of men drafted from the various townships of the county.

Actually a total of 408 names were drawn, with half being drafted and the other half held in reserve in case of exemptions.⁹⁶ From examining Table 8 some of the county's townships must have been exempt from this draft as no names were drafted in Paris, Elbridge, or Symmes Townships. The other townships all had varying numbers of men drafted, ranging from one in Kansas Township to thirty-seven in Embarrass Township.

At least one township tried to evade the draft of 1865 by taking an assessment to clear it from the draft. Asa J. Baber of Kansas Township reported on January 22, 1865 that $108.50 had been collected to clear that township from the draft. However, this request was denied and the draft was applied to Kansas Township.⁹⁷ Although it is difficult to determine how many of the 204 draftees were actually taken into the service, it is known that some 500 more men were credited to the county between July 1864 and the end of the war.⁹⁸ Therefore, most of the 204 draftees probably were called into service.

In summary, Edgar County was deeply effected by the Civil War. Not only had the county sent its finest young men off to fight, but local Copperhead activity, which resulted in violence, left deep scars in the county. Politically, the war did little to change the way in which the county voted. Despite the large number of soldiers who served from the county, voters still favored the Democrats. One of the more significant effects that the war had upon the county was that it permanently took many fine men and able leaders away from it. Men like Shubal York, John Alexander, Sheridan Read, and countless others were now gone.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, Edgar County made a significant contribution to the Civil War effort. Although this statement is rather vague, there is no clear-cut definition on how to determine one county's contribution to the Civil War. In his book, Illinois in the Civil War, Victor Hicken writes that Illinois "followed only New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio in total enlistments."¹ From this statement, one can see that as a state Illinois contributed significantly to the war effort. Thus, on the average those counties in Illinois, including Edgar, must have made significant contributions as well.

One way of showing Edgar County's contribution to the Civil War would be to compare its military contribution with that of surrounding counties and the state in general. To do this, the statistics for Edgar and its surrounding counties are shown in Table 9. The various categories used in Table 9 are described as follows. The first category shows the total credit given to each county at the end of the war. The second category represents the quota established for each county. In subtracting the credit figure from the quota, the number of men in excess or deficit is shown in category three. The number of white males living in each county who were between the ages of fifteen and fifty in 1860 is shown in category four. The fifth category is the number of males who were eligible to serve according to the 1865 State Census returns. The number of enrollments credited to each county as of January 1865, is shown in category six. The percentage of the total credit compared to the number of males subject to military duty is shown in category seven, while the last category shows the percentage of those enrolled in January, 1865, compared to the number of males ages fifteen to fifty.

By examining Table 9 it is easy to see which east-central Illinois counties had contributions that were above or below the state average. For example, only three counties (Douglas, Clark, and Edgar) failed to meet their quotas for the entire war. The other three counties (Vermilion and Champaign, Coles) both exceeded their quotas. At the state level, the number of men in deficit far out-numbered those in excess. Therefore, Edgar County was not alone in its deficit.

A different picture is presented when comparing the number of men credited with serving and those who were considered eligible to serve. In this category, Edgar County had the best percentage, of those listed, with 75 percent. Coles County was close behind with 71 percent. The remaining counties all had percentages between fifty-two and sixty-five. The state average was 63 percent, thus, a few east-central Illinois counties had better percentages than the state.

The enrollment figures shown in Table 9 represents the total number of enllstments credited to each county as of January 1865. Dividing this figure by the number of white males between fifteen and fifty, yields a percentage which shows how much manpower contribution each county made to the war effort. In this, Coles County had the best percentage with 95 percent. This was followed by Douglas (84%), Edgar (77%), Champaign (70%), Vermillion (61%), and Clark (43%). For the state in this category, the percentage was 60 percent. Therefore, some east-central Illinois counties greatly exceeded the state average.

A comparison of each county's manpower contribution is another way of determining how well that particular county contributed to the war effort. In ranking all 102 counties of Illinois in this category, it was found that Edgar County ranked twentieth with its 75 percent. Thus, in terms of men serving compared to men eligible, Edgar County exceeded over 80 percent of all other Illinois counties.

Another way of determining Edgar County's contribution to the war effort would be to examine the war record of those companies and regiments which were comprised of the county's men. By including the regimental histories of those principle Edgar County regiments in this paper, this author has attempted to do this. However as mentioned before, rating the war record of a Civil War unit is sometimes based on a purely personal judgement. That is, just because one unit reported a large number of casualties does not mean that it's contribution to the total war effort was that outstanding. This same unit could have had an equally high number of deserters. Thus, this author will make no attempt to rate the war records of those units discussed in this paper.

Still another way of rating Edgar's contribution to the war effort would be to look at the county's casualty rate as a percentage of those serving. In this, Edgar County's seventy soldiers killed in action represented only 3 percent of the county's total credit. For the state, approximately 4.3 percent of the total credited force was killed in action.² Thus, Edgar County had a smaller casualty percentage than the state in general

From comparing the above statistics, along with the material previously discussed, this author has tried to provide readers with a better picture of Edgar County's contribution to the Civil War. Despite the Copperhead trouble at home, the county still provided over 3,000 men to the war effort out of just over 4,000 males who were of military age. Thus, in comparing Edgar with its surrounding counties and the state in general, it has been shown that the county's overall contribution was significant in more ways than one.

NOTES ON THE APPENDIX

The following appendix represents the most complete listing of Civil War volunteers from Edgar County. Through the use of census records, county histories, regimental histories, Adjutant General reports, and muster rolls, every effort was made to locate all 2,312 men credited with serving from Edgar County. Although not all were found, this listing contains many names not found in previous sources.

The listing contains the individual's name, residence (if known), rank, unit/company, and any remarks about the individual. These include such things as whether the volunteer was killed, died, mustered out, discharged, or transferred. A dash appearing in the remarks column means that no information on that individual was located. Many of those listed sometimes were enrolled in two or more different regiments. In cases such as this only the last known regiment has been listed. A list of abbreviations used in the appendix precedes the actual list.

A NOTE ON SOURCES

In researching this paper many types of sources were consulted. Perhaps the most widely used source was that of the Illinois Adjutant General's Report. This major source of information was used as the basis for the regimental histories contained in this paper. To supplement these histories with casualty figures, etc. such sources as Fox's Regimental Losses in the American Civil War, and Moses' Illinois Historical and Statistical were used.

In the chapter dealing with Edgar County on the battlefield, several different sources were used. Included were the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies, McDonough's Stones River: Bloody Winter in Tennessee, and Battles and Leaders of the Civil War. In researching the demographic statistics used in writing the first chapter many primary sources were used. These included the various census records available for Edgar County. In addition, the 1879 History of Edgar County (Perrin), and Bateman's Historical Encyclopedia of Illinois and History of Edgar County were also consulted.

In the chapter dealing with Copperheads and the political background of the county more types of sources were used. These included actual 1860 election returns for Edgar County, as well as Burnham's Presidential Ballots, 1836-1872. Charles Coleman and Paul Spence's "The Charleston Riot" was used extensively for material dealing with local Copperhead activity. For a much broader picture of the Copperhead movement Frank L. Klement's The Copperheads in the Middlewest was used.

Perhaps the biggest drawback to researching this paper was the almost complete lack of any newspapers from the time period. Supposedly, a fire in the 1940s destroyed most earlier Paris newspaper holdings. Fortunately, a few newspapers have survived but, one can only wonder what wealth of information might have been found if more were available. Also there seems to be a lack of substantial manuscripts available on Edgar Countians who served in the war. Such items as diaries are non-existent.
